SCORES OF CHRISTMAS CELEBRATORS KILLED BY FIRES, GUNS AND TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

INDUSTRIAL LEVEL IS ABOVE AVERAGE, SAYS U. S. REPORT

Steel, Leading Indicator, Singled Out Especially as Having Bigger Output Than Customary in Early Winter Months.

SEASONAL DECLINES SMALLEST IN YEARS

Farm Income, Despite Production Cuts, Larger Than '32 or '33, Reserve Board Survey Shows.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—A better-than-usual level of industrial activity was reported today by the federal reserve board in a Christmas Day survey of business conditions.

Steel, a leading indicator, especially was singled out as having a bigger output than customary in the early winter months. The pre-holiday shopping demand was described in these words:

"Preliminary figures for the first half of December indicate a more than seasonal increase in Christmas trade."

Factory employment, however, suffered a seasonal drop and was reported to be no better than a year ago, while the number employed on public works construction projects was said to have "declined further in November."

For the month of November and early December, the board gave this general summary:

"The rate of industrial activity showed little change and the general level of commodity prices remained unchanged. Distribution of commodities to consumers was well maintained."

Discussing production, the board said the decline was "somewhat smaller than is usual at this season and consequently the board's seasonally adjusted index advanced from 73 per cent of the 1923-1925 average in October to 74 per cent in November."

"In the steel industry," it said, "output continued to increase during November and the first three weeks of December, contrary to the usual seasonal tendency. Automobile production also showed an increase in the early part of December, following a decline in preparations for new models.

"In November, lumber output decreased by more than the estimated seasonal amount. At woolen mills there was a considerable increase in output while consumption of cotton by domestic mills showed a slight decline.

"Activity at meat-packing establishments showed less than the usual seasonal increase. Production of the leading minerals was at about the same level as in October."

Analyzing factory employment, the board found seasonal declines smaller than usual in the automobile, shoe and canning industries, but larger than usual at railroad repair shops and sawmills. Pay rolls of meat packing establishments, while showing a "considerable decline," were reported larger than during any November in recent years.

The decline in awards of construction contracts from the third to fourth quarter was reported "smaller than usual," while farm income, despite sharp production cuts, was said to be "larger than in either 1932 or 1933, reflecting chiefly higher prices and, to a smaller degree, benefit payments."

Freight carloadings were reported down by less than the seasonal amount and retail sales "well maintained."

The usual holiday increase in the demand for currency and continued gold imports were reported the chief developments at the reserve banks.

Patrolman Slain In South Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Dec. 25.—(UP)—State Highway Patrolman E. D. Milam was shot and beaten to death when he sought to quell a disturbance in a schoolhouse six miles south of Greenville late today.

His body was found by other officers, the head battered and pierced by three bullets.

2,000 Brooklyn Sailors Play 'Santa' to Children

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 25.—(AP)—It was Christmas in the Brooklyn navy yard today with 2,000 Santa Clauses.

The Santa Claus detail was composed of every sailor in the yard, playing host after the annual yard custom to 235 poor children and 75 children of the officers on vessels at the yard or stationed there.

Bands blared and children swarmed from yard arm to stoke hole on the four vessels at the yard—the training ship Seattle, and the cruisers New Orleans, Pensacola and Tuscaloosa.

ASYLUM ESCAPE IS SHOT BY WIFE IN ROW AT HOME

Love Tom Mundy, 50, Wounded in Chest, Mouth and Arm; Wife and Son Held.

Shot through the chest, mouth and left arm, Love Tom Mundy, 50, who, according to Atlanta police records, escaped from the state hospital for the insane at Milledgeville on December 12, was in a serious condition at Grady hospital Tuesday night.

His wife, who told police she shot her husband in self-defense, was being held on "suspicion," as was their 19-year-old son, Ed. Mrs. Mundy said, according to police reports, she fired the shots when her husband attacked her.

Though Mundy's son told police he shot his father during an argument at the family home at 644 Kirkwood avenue, the wounded man denied it and said Mrs. Mundy shot him.

Atlanta police were advised several days ago to be on the lookout for Mundy, a patient at the hospital for the insane, but he had not been located until Tuesday night when the shooting took place at the Kirkwood home.

DELMOTTE BREAKS WEDELL RECORD

ISTRES, France, Dec. 25.—(AP)—America's hold on the world speed record for land planes over a closed course was smashed today by the veteran French pilot, Raymond Delmotte, with an avrage of 314 miles an hour.

The 40-year-old flier, who has held several world records during his career, shot his trim French Coudron Renault monoplane over the circuit course for one lap at 321 miles an hour.

It was only after a year and more of dogged attempts that he managed to crack the mark of 306 miles an hour set by the late James Wedell in 1933. Wedell died in a plane crash in Louisiana last June.

Several times in the last few months Delmotte had come close to breaking the record, but coudn't quite do it until today.

Failure stared him in the face again in his first trial at noon, when he attained only 299 miles an hour. An all-night rain had threatened to force postponement of the trials altogether.

Late in the afternoon he decided to have one more try at the record. The weather had cleared. Gaining speed with each lap he finally reached and held the roaring pace which gained him his long-sought goal.

His average speed was clocked at 502.465 kilometers an hour. Wedell's record was 490.8 kilometers. Delmotte's top speed for a single circuit was 514 kilometers.

Delmotte set a world distance record over a closed course in 1927 and since then has held several records in minor categories. He flew the first planes over several African routes now operated regularly by the French.

U. S. AND SOVIET NEARING ACCORD IN DEBTS DISPUTE

Arrival of Former Trade Leader From Soviet Leads Strength to Belief Settlement in Prospect.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—The arrival of Ivan E. Boyev from Moscow today added strength to the belief a settlement of the debts and claims dispute between the United States and the U. S. S. R. is imminent.

Boyev, formerly vice commissar for foreign trade, as chairman of the board of Amtorg will be the trade commissioner in the United States.

The tall, suave Russian arrived on the liner Ile de France, delayed almost a full day by storms on the Atlantic.

Leaves Pier Quietly.

His name was not on the passenger lists and he left the pier quietly and went to the consulate at once for conferences with Leonid M. Tolokonski, the consul general, and other soviet officials.

Boyev was first scheduled to come to New York last September. The delay in settling the debts question held him in Moscow. At that time, it was said he would not come to America until the negotiations between Ambassador Alexander Troyanovsky and the state department were near a settlement.

Since, Troyanovsky has visited the kremlin. The ambassador, on leaving Yokohama, Japan, for San Francisco today, expressed confidence the debt problem would soon be settled.

In recent weeks, several New York industrialists and financiers have been informed by Washington officials that an accord was expected in January.

Other Evidence Cited.

There is other evidence to this effect.

Since mid-November, more than 40 soviet engineers and purchasing agents have come to New York. A dozen more are due to arrive in the next week or two.

These technicians represent the following soviet trusts: Aviation, steel, automobile, oil, tractors, railways, hosiery and knitting, machine tools and heavy industry manufacturing equipment.

It is known that numerous contracts, some running into millions of dollars, are under negotiation. One of these is for the construction of a steel rolling mill. Final agreement on the contracts await a settlement of the debts controversy—which is a hitch over inability to agree on credit extension.

Boyev has been one of the soviet union's most important trade officials for years. Before he was vice commissar of foreign trade, he was a member of the trade commission to Great Britain, head of the trade delegation to Sweden and vice commissar of the bank for foreign trade.

As chairman of the board of Amtorg, he succeeds Peter A. Bogdanov, who returns to Moscow.

TROYANOVSKY FORESEES SETTLEMENT OF DEBTS

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Alexander Troyanovsky, Russian ambassador to the United States, expressed confidence today that the Russo-American debt problem would soon be settled, shortly before he sailed for San Francisco.

This would allow a large expansion of trade between the two countries, the ambassador predicted.

Troyanovsky, who discussed the debt situation with government leaders recently in Moscow, departed on the S. S. President Cleveland and will meet his wife in Honolulu.

Fayette Officer Held In Youth's Slaying

FAYETTEVILLE, Ga., Dec. 25.—T. N. Slaton, 65, Fayette county deputy sheriff, was arrested here today by Sheriff B. W. Adams and is charged with slaying Leroy McElwaney, 19, last Saturday night near Tyrone, in the western part of the county.

McElwaney, it is said, in company with three other boys, Ira Stokes, Lynn Stokes and Fred Harris, had attended a Christmas tree at Hopewill church and it was after the party was over that the shooting took place.

Deputy Slaton, according to officers, admits the shooting but claims he was attempting to stop the car in which the boys were riding and aimed at the tires, the bullet striking the rim of the wheel, glanced and struck McElwaney. The deputy says a compaint had been made at the church that one of the boys in the car had created a disturbance and that he was seeking to question them about it.

Officers Raid Hotel For Outlaw Hamilton

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Even Christmas brought the police no respite in their search for John Hamilton, Dillinger gangster who is the object of a nation-wide hunt by peace officers.

Acting on information received in a telephone call to the detective bureau by an unidentified woman, three squads of police today raided a near northside hotel. The room which Hamilton was said by the informant to occupy was vacant when they arrived.

Betty Gow Reaches U.S. For Hauptmann's Trial

BETTY GOW.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Betty Gow, the nurse who put baby Charles Lindbergh in his crib a few hours before he was snatched to his death by a kidnaper, arrived on the liner Aquitania today to testify at the forthcoming trial of Bruno Hauptmann, the baby's alleged slayer.

The attractive, dark-haired Scotch lass would not discuss the Lindbergh case in any respect. To all questions, she smiled and said:

"I'm sorry."

Miss Gow stayed in her cabin for two hours after the ship docked. Seldom has anyone traveled with so much secrecy. Officials of the line and immigration and customs officers would not say whether she was aboard. Fellow travelers did not know her identity—she was listed as Miss Beatrice Galloway—until newspapermen and photographers located her in a B-deck cabin after more than an hour of search as the liner came up the bay from quarantine.

She then consented to pose just once.

After the pier was fairly cleared, a station wagon from the home of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, Mrs. Lindbergh's mother, drove on. Mrs. Ollie Wheatley, widow of the butler at the Hopewell home of the Lindberghs, went to Miss Gow's cabin.

In a few minutes they came down the gangplank and hastened to the automobile.

In the confusion, the chauffeur lost his keys. Newspapermen helped him

POSSE CAPTURES OFFICER'S SLAYER

Alleged Killer of Ellaville Police Chief Taken in Swamp.

ELLAVILLE, Ga., Dec. 25.—(AP)—A young negro hunted as the slayer of Chief of Police W. B. Souter was reported captured in the swamplands several miles from here early tonight and taken to an undisclosed jail for safe keeping.

Officials at the jail here confirmed the report that the negro had been captured but declined to give any details either about the arrest or as to where he was taken. Sheriff E. C. Rigsby, who led the hunting posse, had not returned to his office and was not expected here tonight.

Earlier, possemen returning from the search reported that the dogs used in the hunt had lost the trail and that the negro apparently had escaped.

The town was aroused by the killing of the officer and reports were that there might be violence if the negro was captured by possemen if there was no officer present at the time. Feeling was running high and there were precautions against such action.

Funeral services for the slain chief were held today.

Chief Souter was killed by a shot through the head early Monday night shortly after he had arrested a negro in connection with a Christmas Eve disturbance.

Home Modernization Permits Rise Swiftly

WASHINGTGON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Home modernization permits, the housing administration reported tonight, showed a gain for November of 62 per cent over last year.

The total of $13,071,000, reports from 772 cities showed, compared with $8,110,000 in November, 1933.

The housing administration, which said the figures reflected the progress of its modernization campaign, previously has cited gains of 18 per cent for August, 27 per cent for September, 50 per cent for October.

New York city, with $1,730,280 in permits, led the November list, followed by Washington, with $627,192, and Los Angeles, with $566,605. By geographical divisions the gains were:

East south central, 136 per cent; south Atlantic, 101 per cent; mountain, 86 per cent; west north central, 80 per cent; west south central, 78; east north central, 71; Pacific, 51; middle Atlantic, 45, and New England, 32.

ATLANTAN KILLED IN CAR-AUTO CRASH

Traffic Fatalities Exceed 1933 Toll as T. W. Emerson Dies.

Holiday accidents had pushed the death toll in Atlanta ahead of the 1933 mark Tuesday as T. Willie Emerson, 650 Bankhead avenue, was killed and a companion injured. There were 64 deaths in Atlanta from auto accidents in 1933.

Emerson's death marked the 65th one in Atlanta thus far this year as a result of accidents in which automobiles figured. He was dead late Monday night when he was rushed to Grady hospital following the collision of a machine he was riding in with a street car at Marietta and Simpson streets.

V. M. Holcombe, 10 Marvin street, was driving the car which crashed into the street car, according to reports. The automobile burst into flames, but Emerson and Holcombe had been extricated from the wreckage before and were not burned.

Emerson was crushed badly in the accident and Holcombe also was injured internally. His condition was reported as "fair" by Grady hospital attaches.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later for Emerson by the West Side funeral home, in charge.

The 64th death in Atlanta thus far this year was chronicled Monday when Werner Jeffries, son of Fulton county Ordinary Thomas J. Jeffries, died as a result of injuries he received in an automobile accident last Friday.

Conference Called To Unite Inflationists

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—A conference to unite inflationists behind a socalled "rational" program has been called for January 16 in Washington.

Senator Thomas, democrat, Oklahoma, one of those behind the move, said farm organizations, the Sound Money League, the committee for the nation, Father Charles E. Coughlin, of Detroit, and members of the senate and house would participate in the conference. In the evening there will be a banquet for inflation advocates in Congress.

Thomas said the aim would be an agreement "on an objective."

OFFER TO ASSIST CITY POWER PLANS RENEWED BY PWA

Allotments of $47,000,000 Already Made for Municipal Plants Administration Reveals.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—The public works administration today checked over allotments of $47,000,000 already made for municipal power plants and renewed an offer to assist cities whose projects of this kind were challenged in the courts.

An active agency in the administration's campaign for lower electricity rates, the PWA discolsed also that nearly $200,000,000 has been allotted to federal power works.

Henry T. Hunt, general counsel, coincidentally named nine cases in which power companies had attacked as many cities' determination to build their own power plants. In two cases the cities and PWA won victories, and the plants have been completed, he said.

One Project Held Up.

One project has been held up. In two instances judges have refused to dismiss the power companies' suits. Arguments are being taken in the others.

"PWA has a better brief every time," Hunt contended. He explained that the power companies usually challenged PWA projects under the fourteenth amendment, while PWA centered its defense on the general welfare clause.

In checking over the municipal power plant court cases, Hunt said an appeal would be taken in the case in which the Missouri Public Service Company had enjoined the sale to the PWA of bonds for a $315,000 project.

Hunt contended that the effect of the district judge's decision was to deny the federal government the right to finance municipal projects, whether for power or otherwise.

Michigan Suit Beaten.

One of PWA's victories was gained in October when the supreme court refused to review a case brought against Alegan, Mich., by the Consumers Power Company. The company had secured an injunction against building the $410,000 plant which was reversed by the court of appeals. The highest court found in effect that if the company had a "legal injury," it was inflicted by the constitution of Michigan, which authorized municipalities to operate power plants.

Public works officials have made no secret that they expected the proposed municipal power plant in New York city to face a court test if the project was approved. They saw an indication that PWA was not impressed by the threat of litigation in a grant last week of $320,000 to Columbus, Ohio, for a power house and the loan and grant of $97,000 to Lamoni, Iowa, for a municipal plant.

Simultaneously Secretary Ickes said PWA was "seriously considering" applications from several other cities in addition to that submitted tentatively by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia.

TRICKERY CHARGED TO MISS PERKINS

U. S. Put in League of Nations by Resolution, Asserts Tinkham.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Representative Tinkham, republican, Massachusetts, today accused Secretary Perkins, of "contemptible trickery" in connection with the passage last session of a resolution through which, he said, "the United States has entered the League of Nations."

In a statement Tinkham referred to the resolution making the United States a member of the international labor organization. He asserted it was rushed through "in the eleventh-hour confusion on the eve of adjournment last June," and added:

"This audacious intrigue to have the United States enter the League of Nations by way of one of the organs of the League is to be followed by an attempt to have the United States enter another of its organs, the permanent court of international justice of the League of Nations, this subsequently to be followed by a proposal of full membership in the League of Nations.

"Thus the independence of the United States will be destroyed, the will of the American people thwarted, and the United States inevitably involved in the next European conflict."

Tinkham fought the measure when it was presented last June in the house. He is a member of the foreign affairs committee, which approved it, he said, without a quorum and without hearings.

Through passage of the labor resolution, he said, this country "finally accepted a part of the Treatry of Versailles, a treaty which has been repeatedly repudiated by the people of the United States."

"The time for this base betrayal of

Christmas Meaningless To Girl in 2-Year Coma

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Patricia Maguire's Christmas was the same as any other day to the "sleeping beauty" who has been in a coma since February 15, 1932. Her mother abandoned plans to have Patricia propped up in a chair to take part in Christmas festivities and the girl spent the day in bed.

Patricia, her mother said, has shown no improvement other than her ability to respond to instruction written on a slate, a sign which was first noticed about a month ago.

Only the immediate family was present at the Christmas celebration in the suburban home of Mrs. Peter Miley, Patricia's mother. The gifts and cards which were sent to Miss Maguire were not taken to the sleeping girl's room.

PRETTY WEATHER HELPS CITY ENJOY GREAT CHRISTMAS

Best Holiday in Five Years Is Celebrated Here; Rain Today Seen by Forecaster.

Atlanta will awaken this morning heartened and inspired by the realization that in thousands of homes in the city Christmas was merrier and was celebrated with gayer abandon Tuesday than in many years.

Warm, springlike weather, registering well above the 50-mark most of the day contributed to the setting for the Atlanta Yuletide celebration, just as improved business conditions had arranged the stage for a Christmas generally agreed to have been the best in at least five years.

Though Chief of Police T. O. Sturdivant's statement that the lid would be off Tuesday for those who wished to partake of egg-nog and other Christmas nips as long as they consumed it indoors, undoubtedly was taken at face value and treated accordingly, the police Tuesday night reported that drunkenness, and particularly arrests for that offense, were far below the mark of previous years.

The regulars, those who usually appear before the recorders on drunkenness charges from five to ten times a year, all had registered in before dark Tuesday night, but exception always is made for them when discussing drunkenness in the city, according to the police.

Atlanta's Christmas was unmarred by reports of local tragedy. No serious automobile accidents, large fires, murders nor other depressing events which frequently headline local Yuletide festivities were to be reported.

Joy was unconfined in at least 13 Atlanta homes, which only a few days ago were buried under the gloom of a doubtful and possibly dismal future. The generosity of Atlanta this Christmastime converted those homes into happy ones through the assurance of enough incomes during 1935 to keep food on the table every day, to provide proper clothing for their children and to maintain, unbroken, the family circle. These 13 families, through the greater response to The Constitution's "Ten Opportunities," which this year was able to take care of three families more than formerly, are happy beyond measure.

And the "Big Brothers" campaign, which, hand-in-hand with the "Ten Opportunities," raised more than $6,800 for destitute Atlantans, made it possible for Christmas to be Christmas in fact and not just another day in thousands of Atlanta homes.

Even the weatherman was congenial and generous Tuesday. Monday he had forecast rain and clouds for the Christmas menu. However, he repented early Tuesday morning and a bright, warm sun blessed Atlanta's Christmas Day. The weather he promised for Christmas he postponed until today, he stated. Gray skies and medium rainfall will be the fare for late this afternoon, according to the

Atlantan Slays Self With Shotgun Blast

Artie Adams, 57, of 525 Parkway drive, shot and killed himself with a shotgun early Christmas morning at his home, according to police reports.

He left two notes, one asking a friend to return the borrowed shotgun, but he gave no reason for his act. A coroner's jury Tuesday afternoon held the shot was fired with suicidal intent.

Police were told he had attempted to kill himself twice before. His brother is G. T. Adams, of Lakewood Heights.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon, following the inquest, at the Mount Zion Methodist church, the Rev. A. C. Peacock officiating, and burial was in the churchyard.

THREE CHILDREN AND MOTHER DIE IN TREE BLAZE

11-Year-Old Louisiana Child Killed at Shreveport by Playmate Who Accidentally Fires Rifle Received as Gift.

FIVE END LIVES DURING HOLIDAY

Automobile Accidents Fatal to 58 Throughout Nation, Including Three in Georgia.

By the Associated Press.

Death cut through the ranks of Christmas celebrators Tuesday, striking down several score victims.

Fires, guns and traffic accidents exacted the heaviest casualties as the nation observed the gay holiday.

A Christmas tree blaze resulted in the deaths of a mother and three children at Sedalia, Mo., and the critical injury of two other persons. Three youngsters and their mother lost their lives and the father and another child suffered serious burns when flames destroyed their home at Joplin, Mo. Fires also snuffed out the lives of a man and woman at Chicago, and of a farmer near Madison, Minn. A four-year-old girl succumbed to burns at San Diego, Cal.

Huey Crawford, 11, was killed at Shreveport, La., by a playmate who accidentally fired a rifle he had received as a gift.

Rene Katz, six months old, strangled at Little Rock, Ark., when his sleeping suit twisted about his neck while his parents were preparing a reception for Santa Claus.

A prowler was shot to death at Chicago. Three persons died in two Alabama gun fights. A bank looter was slain by possemen in Nebraska. Crowds hunted a negro youth alleged to have shot to death W. B. Souter, chief of police at Ellaville, Ga. Authorities at Port Jefferson, N. Y., sought to dispel the mystery raised by the finding of the body of Mrs. Loretta Wilson, 19, in a thicket. A boy was killed in a Mississippi hunting accident and another in an accidental shooting in Missouri.

Five persons committed suicide on the gala feast day—one in New York, two in Georgia, one in Louisiana and one in Kentucky.

Traffic accidents resulted in the following fatalities: Arkansas, 10 (since Sunday); Missouri, 9; Michigan, 14 (since Sunday); Texas, 5; Washington state, 5; Oklahoma, 4; Louisiana, 4; Georgia, 3; California, 4; Ohio, 3; Texas 2; Illinois 2; Massachusetts, 2; and one each in North Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Kansas and Idaho.

The bodies of three children and a pilot whose plane crashed in ugly weather on the frozen desert were brought to Elko, Nev.

Travel encountered new hazards as freezing weather held on in most northern states. The fire menace increased.

Three persons suffered burns when flames razed a home at Belding, Mich., and four were injured in a New York blaze caused by a short circuit in a Christmas tree lighting system. Three were hurt in an explosion and fire which leveled a tenement at Newport, Rhode Island.

A severe cold wave moved over the Rocky Mountain region, forcing the thermometer down to 18 below zero at Havre, Mont. Forecasters predicted the invasion would extend over virtually the whole midcontinent before Thursday.

The young girls drowned in the Blue river near Crete, Neb., when they broke through the thin ice while at play, Joe Cawood, owner of a liquor dispensary at Evarts, Ky., was shot to death following an argument over extensions of credit to a customer.

A bomb injured six persons at a feast in Santiago, Cuba. Several were stabbed or hurt by fireworks in Louisiana. An engineer and a brakeman lost their lives in railroad mishaps at Cleveland.

Most of the nation enjoyed comparatively temperate weather. Snow gave a seasonal touch to a half-dozen northern states. Light rains fell in several of those to the south.

But Santa's cheeks were nipped as he sped through the northwest. Helena, Mont., had a minimum of 14 below zero. The mercury dipped to minus 3 at Detroit Lakes, Minn.

A "severe cold wave" was promised the Rocky mountain region and virtually all the north central states. Snow and sleet were expected to accompany the bitter invasion as it surged down from Canada. Zero temperatures were scheduled to spread as far

CCC EXPANSION STUDIED BY U. S.

Move Would Provide Increased Non-Competitive Work-Relief.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—An expansion of the civilian conservation corps to carry more of the burden of helping the unemployed is under consideration by administration relief experts.

It is one of a number of proposals being studied as a possible means of putting more emphasis on work relief rather than outright grants of assistance.

The proposal has come from a group of members of congress who have watched the work of the CCC. Heretofore CCC work has been confined chiefly to more or less unattached youths, many of whom have never found regular jobs since they completed school. The proposal now under consideration would expand it to include older men and married men.

Senator Pope, democrat, Idaho, one of those who proposed the expansion, has taken the idea up with high administration officials including Harry L. Hopkins, relief director, and has received assurance it would be studied.

"The CCC is doing useful work and doing it well," Pope said. "Sometimes across the road from the CCC workers will be others on relief work, assigned to some project of doubtful value and working listlessly and inefficiently.

"If we are going to spend public money this way, it should go toward worthy projects and the workers should have able direction, as they have under the CCC. It is much better for the men themselves, also, to feel that they are doing something constructive rather than just putting in time."

find them. Through it all, Miss Gow was the calmest person around the dock.

The station wagon turned north on the express westside highway, toward the George Washington bridge—the route to the Morrow home. Advance arrangements called for Miss Gow to stay at the Morrow home.

This is Miss Gow's first visit to America since she returned to her home in Scotland after the first months of the long hunt for baby Lindbergh's kidnapers.

Miss Gow was the baby's nurse from birth. It was she who discovered him gone about 10 o'clock the night of March 1, 1932. She ran into Mrs. Lindbergh's boudoir, then downstairs to tell Colonel Lindbergh and Wheatley, the butler.

Colonel Lindbergh ran upstairs, grabbed a shotgun and started a search of the yard; then he telephoned police.

Through the long investigation, Miss Gow had the confidence of the Lindberghs. However, police questioned her friend, Henry "Red" Johnson, in whose company she had been frequently seen. He was an alien sailor. Although cleared of any suspicion in the case, he was subsequently deported.

With the birth of the Lindberghs' second son, Jon, there was much conjecture on whether Miss Gow would return to the Lindbergh household. But friends discounted any possibility that she would remain now because of the publicity attendant on her as nurse of the famous flyer's firstborn.

BELL-ANS FOR INDIGESTION

BRUNO HAUPTMANN'S WIFE PLEADS AGAINST PREJUDICE

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Mrs Bruno Richard Hauptmann, her voice breaking repeatedly with sobs, appealed to the nation today not to prejudice her husband before his trial for the murder of the Lindbergh baby.

Speaking in a special radio broadcast from the hotel opposite the Hunterdon county jail, where Hauptmann is confined, the little German woman said, "I would like to appeal to the people to hear his side of the case because I think his defense attorneys will show that he is innocent of the crime."

Her voice broke when she said Hauptmann had told one of his counsel, Lloyd Fisher, of Flemington, that he would like to buy Christmas presents for his wife and infant son, Mannfried, but had no money.

Funds Attached.

The funds of the couple have been attached under a federal income tax lien and Mrs. Hauptmann asserted that she was virtually without money. Friends in the Bronx, where Hauptmann lived at the time of his arrest, and others have provided a modest Christmas celebration for the wife and child.

The loyal wife made no Christmas visit to Hauptmann. At her last visit, Saturday, she said she did not bring their child because "it almost breaks my husband's heart to see him now."

In her modest one-room establishment in a private home here she gave Mannfried his first Christmas party. A small decorated tree was placed near his bed, which she and the child share, and she soon found her time taken, she said, with blocking Mannfried's efforts to pull the decorations from the tree. His presents, from friends in the Bronx and elsewhere, including clothing, a drum, two mechanically operated toy automobiles, a carriage cover and a small sum of money.

Hauptmann, a high official said, may be asked whether he favors discarding the present jury panel and drawing a new list of 300 talesmen as a result of the furore aroused by distribution to jurors of a booklet regarded by both defense and prosecution counsel as prejudicial. The prisoner, reported anxious to go on trial January 2, has not been told of the possibility that a 40-day delay may occur.

Lifers Win Parole for TB Test

Warden Roy Best (left), of the Colorado state penitentiary, hands Mike Schmidt (center) and Carl Erickson, lifers, their paroles won at the risk of their lives. The two convicts volunteered as "human guinea pigs" in a test to determine effectiveness of newly discovered anti-tuberculosis serum. Each was injected with tuberculosis bacilli without ill effect.

Hauptmann Counsel, Prosecution Consider Jury Tampering Charge

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 25.—(AP)—The prosecution and defense of Bruno Richard Hauptmann in his trial for the Lindbergh kidnap-murder will determine at separate conferences tomorrow whether charges of jury tampering are sufficiently grave to warrant demands for a new panel of talesmen.

Attorney-General David T. Wilents and his associates will meet at Trenton and Edward J. Reilly, of Brooklyn, Hauptmann's chief defense counsel, will confer at Flemington with the other defense attorneys.

The possibility of discharge of the present jury panel of 150 citizens of Hunterdon county arose when Anthony M. Hauck Jr., county prosecutor, disclosed that pamphlets recounting the purported acquittal of a defendant charged with a similar crime had been mailed to members of the panel.

The disclosure by Hauck, causing C. Lloyd Fisher, of Flemington, associate defense counsel, to charge Hauck's motive was to jeopardize Hauptmann's defense, may necessitate a delay of more than a month while the legal requirements for selection of a new panel are met. The trial now is set for January 2.

The defense attorneys have urged Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, who will preside at the trial, to conduct a joint conference with state's lawyers to determine whether a new panel is necessary. The justice, absent from Trenton during the holiday, has not replied to the suggestion. There was a possibility that he would call such a conference on Thursday in Flemington to permit the attendance of Hauptmann.

Hauptmann partook today of the Christmas dinner provided for prisoners at the county jail by the warden's wife, Mrs. Harry O. McCrea, and devoted his time to reading.

Mrs. Hauptmann broadcast an appeal for the public to await developments before judging her husband guilty. She reiterated her belief in his innocence, asserting that "many things will come out at the trial which the people do not know now."

Despite the possibility of the discharge of the jury panel, Sheriff John H. Curtiss and the jury commissioner, Charles Holcombe, will proceed tomorrow with the selection of 48 names from which drawing of the Hauptmann jury will begin.

MISSOURI BOY DIES SAVING TOYS FROM BLAZE

JOPLIN, Mo., Dec. 25.—(AP)—A sick boy, 6 years old, died trying to save the toys hidden away for his Christmas surprise from a Christmas Eve fire in his home which also cost the lives of his mother and brother and sister.

Only two of the six occupants of the modest home of Everett Crume, 28-year-old miner, escaped death from the flames and smoke following an explosion resulting when Crume sought to kindle a heating stove with kerosene. They are Crume and 5-year-old Jeannie Crume, both recovering from severe burns in a hospital.

The dead were Mrs. Opal Crume, 26; the infant, Jimmy Crume; Frances, 3, and 6-year-old Buddy.

As the joyously lighted house turned into a flaming inferno, Buddy dashed from his sickbed to a second-story bedroom to rescue the toys he knew had been stowed away for him. Firemen found him suffocated to death.

Three-year-old Frances sought refuge behind a divan. She died of her burns. The house was destroyed.

It was the second tragic Christmas in the Crume family. A boy died of pneumonia last December 27.

An aged woman was killed and three or four men and women were brought to a clinic here for treatment. All were unconscious. Details of the accident were not immediately available.

A hurried examination of effects found in the car indicated that the people were residents of Minden. A number of Christmas presents, some of them labeled "To Jimmie" were found among the effects.

ICY ROAD CRASH FATAL TO MISSOURI COUPLE

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Nearing the destination of a belated honeymoon journey, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Eicklekamp, Montgomery, Ala., were fatally injured when their automobile overturned on a icy pavement near here yesterday.

Married four months ago, they were bound for Gentry, Ark., for a Christmas visit with Mrs. Eicklekamp's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Karl.

Eicklekamp, 38, died here late last night in the hospital where his wife, 37, succumbed a few hours earlier. He was a building contractor and owner of a store in Montgomery, and had been prominent in lodge and business circles there.

Eicklekamp asked that he be buried with his wife at Gentry. Mr. and Mrs. Karl came here to claim the bodies.

FLAMING CHRISTMAS TREE FATAL TO MISSOURI BOY

SEDALIA, Mo., Dec. 25.—(AP)—A flaming Christmas tree, ignited by a flying match-head, kindled a fire that brought death today to a child and serious burns to six other persons.

Virginia Miller, three years old, died this morning in a hospital of burns. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Judson Miller, and a six-year-old brother, Jack, were believed to be fatally burned. A sister, Barbara, and Henry Gumm and Miss Thelma Williams, who were calling on the Millers last night, were seriously burned.

The match head flew into the tree as Gumm lit a cigaret. The tinder-like tree blazed up, firing the interior of the house. Passers-by rescued the victims. The children were in their beds upstairs. The house was destroyed.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Charles Reese Trowbridge, 60, for many years engaged in newspaper and publicity work in Indiana and neighboring states, suffered a fatal injury when he fell while sweeping snow from a walk in front of his home here last night. His head struck the pavement and he died within a few minutes.

Trowbridge was born in Mattoon, Ill. He attended a Terre Haute (Ipd.) high school and was graduated by De Pauw University.

He was later employed on newspapers in Indianapolis and Chicago and for a time was editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel.

ONE KILLED, ONE INJURED IN CAROLINA ACCIDENT

LEXINGTON, N. C., Dec. 25.—(AP) Luther Walser, 55, Lexington furniture worker, was killed and his son, William, 12, hurt when the father's car overturned near here today.

Investigating officers said the machine apparently left the road on a straight-away and flipped over as the driver attempted to get it back on the hard surface.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Christmas Eve accidents in New Orleans resulted in injuries to a dozen persons.

Six were hurt, two seriously, in automobile accident, while a half-dozen others suffered burns from firecrackers.

Two of the automobile victims were Adele Chermaie, 19, and her escort, Nat Ring, Tulane University medical student, who were struck by a hit-and-run driver as they were entering their car in front of the Girls' home.

Fireworks victims were Buddy Roach, 10, burns about the face; Edward St. Ville, 7, burns of the fingers; Catherine Gambino, 9, lacerations of the fingers; Ruth Foster, 27, lacerations of the left hand; Wilson Polite, 9, burns about the race, and Floyd Posecal, 8, burned hands.

RHODE ISLAND EXPLOSION WRECKS TENEMENT HOUSE

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Police believed tonight that a bomb caused an explosion early today in which three persons were slightly injured, a tenement house demolished and eight families driven from near-by homes.

A three-pound can labeled "gunpowder" and containing a small amount of explosive, was found in the debris. Fire and police officials said the terrific force of the blast indicated a bomb explosion.

Salvatore Raffa, owner and sole occupant of the three-story wooden tenement at Poplar and Third streets, returned from Providence where he had gone with his family to spend the holidays, to assist police in their investigation. He told authorities he had carefully banked the fire in the furnace before leaving and that he could advance no explanation of the blast.

The injured were neighbors who were thrown from their beds by the force of the explosion which leveled the house, shattered windows and shook the plaster from the walls of homes within a radius of 200 feet. One house was badly damaged by fire.

The injured were Mrs. Grace Groux, whose home adjoins the Raffa property, minor lacerations from flying glass and bruises; her daughter, Anna, contusions, and Edward Williams, 18, a neighbor, lacerated right wrist.

PROFITABLE HOBBY.

RACINE, Wis.—If Leonard Larson, 11, hadn't the hobby of stamp collecting, he wouldn't have a $50 Christmas present today.

Leonard bought a 10-cent album at a store and found between its pages three $10 bills and a twenty. He took the money to the police station where they told him to keep the money as there was no way of identifying its owners.

MISTLETOE HIS MISFORTUNE.

PARIS, Ky.—Aylette Buckner, Bourbon county farmer, spent Christmas Day in a hospital here. He suffered a broken arm and dislocated collarbone when he fell from a tree from which he was gathering mistletoe.

THOUGHTFUL GREETINGS.

BALTIMORE.—The 250 Baltimore children who can't leave their homes to celebrate Christmas got greetings from the man who makes them stay at home.

The children are those quarantined for communicable diseases and the man is Dr. Adolph Weinsirl, of the city health department. Dr. Weinsirl sent each of the 250 a Christmas card.

YULE WOE NARROWLY AVERTED.

YONKERS, N. Y.—Christmas was almost a day of sorrow for Samuel Scharfstein, merchant.

He had $1,000 in an old cardboard box in his store and when he went to look for it yesterday, the box was gone. Scharfstein thought he had been robbed, until one of his clerks remembered seeing the box in a pile of refuse which had been collected by a garbage truck only a short time before.

Scharfstein hurried to the city incinerator and arrived just as the truck was about to dump its load into the furnace. Scattered among the debris were crisp new bills and the remnants of the cardboard box.

Scharfstein was very happy.

PLENTY OF SANTAS.

SALT LAKE CITY.—"Subs for Santa," recruited by the Salt Lake Tribune, brought joy to the hearts of more than 3,000 needy boys and girls here today. The newspaper investigated worthy poor families and assigned a home to each of the several volunteer Saint Nicks.

NOBODY GOES HUNGRY.

DENVER. — Denver's needy had a bountiful Christmas dinner today. A. A. McVittie, cafe owner, announced he would serve turkey dinners to "every hungry man, woman and child." Thanksgiving Day, when he served free dinners, Governor E. C. Johnson poured champagne for the guests.

SEES HER 116TH CHRISTMAS.

ST. LOUIS.—With "a merry Christmas to the whole round world," Flora Tatum Williams, negro, today celebrated what she says is her 116th birthday. She says she knows she is 116 because of records kept for trading purposes when she was a slave at Clinton, N. C., where she was born Christmas Day, 1818.

GETS A GOOD DINNER.

NEW ORLEANS. — Pierre Gray, negro, is glad his bondsman failed to appear to bail him out of jail yesterday.

Now he'll get a Christmas dinner.

While arrangements were being made for bond for two men charged with Gray with illicit manufacture of whisky, the negro heard United States Commissioner R. H. Carter Jr., recite the menu for Christmas at the federal jail.

"I'll get in on that I guess," Gray said. "It's just as well he didn't show up."

Creamed chicken and all the fixings are on today's menu at the jail.

HOME FOR CHRISTMAS.

SHARPSBURG, Ky.—Two prisoners who broke out of the Sharpsburg jail left Police Judge J. C. Nelson and Town Marshall Leonard Howard this Christmas greeting: "We have gone home for Christmas. May both of you have a merry one and a happy New Year."

The prisoners, Earl Call and Adrian Kerns, serving sentences for drunkenness, broke a bolt on the jail lock. Judge Nelson said no effort will be made to capture them until after the holidays.

REGULAR VISITORS.

BELLINGHAM, Wash., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Santa and the stork are getting to be regular visitors at the Lloyd Walters home here. Three years ago they brought little Mary Ann, and today they brought Marilyn Joy.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Christmas in Nebraska state prison set a new precedent today—the convicts had Warden Dan Kavanaugh and his wife as their "guests."

Without formality, the Kavanaughs dined at noon with gray-garbed men on all sides of them at one of the long tables in the mess hall.

The prisoners had received their gifts and visitors early today but they wanted "company" for dinner and had turned to the man they call friend, the warden.

Every convict in the prison, 865 men, signed a 22-foot invitation which was presented to Kavanaugh and his wife. They readily accepted.

United States weather bureau station at Candler field.

Literally speaking, Christmas in Atlanta went off with a bang.

Old and young alike shot firecrackers from the first streak of dawn Tuesday until the owl cars were completing their runs early this morning. To a northerner, it appeared to be a mis-dated Independence Day, for Atlanta, as other southern cities, is noisier on Christmas than on Independence Day.

Just how the old Dixie custom of shooting firecrackers and throwing torpedoes on Christmas originated, no one seems to know. Firecracker stores during the past week sprung up all over the city and have enjoyed excellent business. Santa Claus included a few packages of firecrackers and some boxes of torpedoes in most of the stockings he filled Tuesday morning.

Wide-eyed children, their eyes sparkling with excitement, who were up before dawn Tuesday morning rousing their parents to escort them to the mantelpieces to see what Santa had left, were reported to have retired early last night, tired but happy, and snuggling against them were toys which, though new-made friends, were select ones because they were what Santa had been asked to bring.

In as many Atlanta homes Tuesday night there were as many radiantly happy parents. The joy which had beamed on the countenances of the children was reflected in the faces of their parents, who were satisfied with their ability to provide the sort of a Christmas for their children they wished them to have. In many homes, it was the first Christmas in fact that has been celebrated in several years. And there were few homes, according to reports, where happiness was not the honored guest.

CHRISTENDOM OF WORLD JOINS IN CELEBRATION

By the Associated Press.

The Christian world laid aside humdrum tasks today to rejoice again over the nativity of the Christ Child.

Christmas stockings were filled in the White House, in a Yugoslav palace for a boy king and for five tiny quintuplets in an humble Ontario home. The day stilled momentarily the rumbling of guns in the bitter Chaco war, but there was no armistice.

WASHINGTON—It was an old-fashioned Christmas at the White House. Sistie Dall, 7, and brother Buzzie, 4, and Sara, the president's grandchildren, took down well-filled stockings from the huge fireplace. In a Christmas message to the nation the president asked that it be one of "courage and unity."

BETHLEHEM—The bells of Bethlehem rang in joyous acclaim of the anniversary of the Savior's birth, celebrated by thousands of pilgrims at the Church of the Nativity, erected over the spot where once the manger is said to have lain.

VATICAN CITY—Pope Pius in his private chapel at midnight recited three masses in honor of the birth of Christ. He planned to spend the day in rest.

CALLANDER, Ont.—There were gaily-filled stockings and a Christmas tree for the Dionne quintuplets, soon to be seven months old. Presents and letters came from widespread places.

LA PAZ, Bolivia—The war ministry announced Bolivians "dominated the action" during a Paraguayan attack in the Chaco war. (The pope had sought a Christmas armistice in the fighting.)

BERLIN—A heavy snow gave much of Germany a white Christmas. Prince Louis Ferdinand sent his father, the former Kaiser Wilhelm, now at Doorn, an American radio set for his limousine.

BELGRADE, YUGOSLAVIA — A king hung up his stockings as did millions of American children. He was 11-year-old Peter, called to the throne by the assassination of his father, Alexander, at Marseille.

JUKKASJARVI, SWEDEN—This community, far north of the arctic circle, enjoyed a Christmas dinner which included the marrow of boiled reindeer bones, reindeer butter, a cheese made from reindeer and rye bread.

LONDON—The British Isles had the usual fog for Christmas but no snow. King George last night gave presents to servants and tenants at Sandringham palace.

BUENOS AIRES—Trucks and airplanes carried thousands of gifts of tobacco and candy to warring soldiers of Paraguay and Bolivia in the Chaco Boreal, where the summer heat is intense.

TOKYO—Japan's New Year's gifts showed a decided militaristic trend—with model warships, tanks, airplanes and guns in demand. The Christmas business was unusually active.

PARIS—The government played Santa Claus to children of the nation's 400,000 unemployed. Premier Pierre Flandin, whose idea it was, distributed the presents in Paris.

ROME—The bells of 400 churches invited Italians here to Christmas Eve mass last night. Thousands crowded the Basilica of Saint Mary Major, where five pieces of wood, said to be from the crib in which Jesus lay, were on display.

SAARBRUECKEN, SAAR BASIN TERRITORY—People from Chicago, San Francisco and Buffalo were among those observing Christmas here. They returned, along with hundreds of other former Saarlanders, to vote in the January 13 plebiscite. Nazis bore their expenses.

A. C. LANGSTON, 66, DIES IN TENNESSEE

A. C. Langston, 66, former Atlantan, died Monday night at his residence in Columbia, Tenn.

Until he retired a short time ago, Mr. Langston was southern representative of the Jenkins Brothers Company, of New York, a position he held for 35 years.

He is survived by his wife; three brothers, J. D. Langston, of Atlanta; A. W. Langston, of Cleveland, Ohio, and C. O. Langston, of Jacksonville, Fla.; and two sisters, Mrs. H. H. Norman and Mrs. Flora Coggins, both of Atlanta.

Funeral services and burial will be conducted in Columbia, Tenn., today, it was announced.

About 30 instances of quintuplet births are known from medical literature, but none in which all babies lived more than a few days, until the famous Dionne quintuplets arrived.

Letters by George Washington show that he recognized the bad effects of soil erosion on his own farms and took steps to "bind together and prevent the earth from gullying."

ATLANTA, GA., DEC. 26, 1934.

FOR A GREATER AMERICA

The broad and inclusive program of development of the nation's land, water and mineral resources outlined by the national resources board contemplates the first serious effort to capitalize in an orderly way and on a long-time basis the incomparable assets of the United States.

Other nations are noted either for their minerals, their flora and fauna, their climatic advantages or their navigable or water power streams. No other country than the United States possesses in abundance all of these natural advantages. Either generally or in some area in the country there exists in unlimited quantity and of unsurpassed fineness every product or natural advantage to be found anywhere in the world.

The world's greatest deposits of coal and iron ore are to be found in America; our marbles, granites and clays equal those to be found on any other continent; our forests and agricultural products have no superiors; we have more navigable streams than any other nation and have unlimited opportunity for the development of water power. No other nation has as great a range of climate, including the bleak winter weather of northern New England and the northwestern states and the salubrious winters of Florida and southern California. Nowhere else are the soils so productive.

Heretofore America has largely neglected this tremendous natural wealth in so far as a planned program of development is concerned. The great forests that covered North America when the white man first came have been ruthlessly destroyed, as in the case of Georgia, resulting in the drying up of thousands of water courses. Huge areas of tillable soil have disappeared from erosion that could easily have been prevented.

As a result of lack of foresight and proper planning large areas unsuited to farming are occupied by farming families while other areas with rich agricultural opportunities have been permitted to lie idle. We have sought to use land for one purpose when it could have been better used for another.

The national resources board expresses the opinion that the plan it advances in general terms would lead to "the broad distribution of human welfare at which our national policy aims." To this end it recommends that federal assistance be given to moves to minimize waste of natural resources; studies be made looking to the development of flood control, power or irrigation projects; that 75,000,000 acres of sub-marginal lands be retired from farming operations; that subsistence homesteads be increased and that a six-year public works construction program, with a budget of $10,000,000,000, be launched.

Included among the lesser recommendations in the report of the board are projects seeking the development along lines of most value to the people of the country of forests, parks and wild life ranges, irrigation, grazing, soil erosion, water and land uses, the sum total of the projects constituting a program to conserve and develop all the natural resources of the country in the way best conducive to the welfare of all the people.

The report is not a mere theoretical and guess-work program. It is based upon many months of careful investigation and presented in full detail in a 100,000-word volume. The board describes the report as "laying the basis of a comprehensive long-range national policy," and predicts that "if the recommendations contained therein are put into effect, they will end the untold waste of our national domain now and will measurably enrich and enlarge these national treasures as time goes on."

The completion of such a program will be a colossal undertaking, even for so great a nation as the United States, but even if the report brings about no more than the adoption of some of its features, its preparation will have been well worth while. There has been so much destruction, and so little intelligent development, of our natural assets that definite planning, even though limited in scope, will be helpful.

A HARD TASK FINELY DONE

A fine contribution to Atlanta's Christmas season was made in the efficiency with which the tremendous traffic in the shopping center was directed by the members of the traffic squad of the police department.

The city has never known a greater congestion of automobile traffic, nor more tremendous crowds of shoppers on its streets. Thousands of automobiles moved throughout the city from early morning until nightfall, with lines of pedestrians pouring across street intersections.

Without skilful control of an unprecedented, and largely unexpected condition, serious traffic snarls would have ensued with long delays and the imminent danger of accidents.

That despite these conditions traffic should have been kept rolling at a fast rate is a tribute to the efficiency and the hard work of Atlanta's policemen.

The average American take genuine pride in his home town guardians of the peace if they are an intelligent and soldierly group. The people of Atlanta may well have such feeling after the splendid service, rendered as it was firmly but in the spirit of the season, of the city's traffic officers during the pre-holiday shopping period.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR 1935

Definite belief that the influence of the tremendous pre-holiday season trade of the country will be extended to business conditions in January is expressed in this week's issue of the Washington Review, a periodical summary of national business affairs published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

In discussing the prospects for continued improvement, the Review says:

The general level of business activity has risen in the final quarter of 1934. The extent of the rise gives assurance that the first quarter of 1935 will open with more momentum than a first quarter has had for several years. Although the detailed data showing actual accomplishments toward the end of 1934 will not disclose the whole story until mid-January, the evidence at hand leaves no doubt the results will outrun expectations of two months ago, and still less doubt that industrial production in January will show more than the seasonal upturn, with accompanying additions to employment and pay rolls.

Corroborating the opinion of the national chamber of commerce, replies to a questionnaire sent to industrial and business leaders by the National Statistical Survey of Business Attitudes express practically unanimous conviction that conditions will continue to improve during 1935. These replies indicate that the peak of improvement is expected to be reached in April.

Industrial interests are certain to register major gains during the first quarter of the year as a result of the tremendous Christmas trade. Reserve stocks of many commodities have been completely exhausted and the stocks on hand of all others brought far below normal.

Incident to the replenishment of these stocks, many thousands of industrial workers will be removed from the ranks of the unemployed and will add a new element to an already increased buying population. Retail trade will thus be given a further impetus.

The depression of 1921 disappeared before a tremendous buying revival in the fall months, the influence of which was carried over into the following year. Every evidence now points to the fact that the same "break" has occurred in the depression that started in 1929 and that every month from now on will see the country freeing itself more and more from the effects of the economic upheaval of the past five years.

THE WORLD'S WINDOW

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

In the Halls Of Justice.

When a man is accused of a crime or misdemeanor and he enters the courtroom where his case is to be tried, he kneels down in the doorway and murmurs piously: "There is no justice in man . . . May Allah render justice here!" He stays on his knees arguing with fellow-accused and native lawyers, all on their knees, till his case is called. The system of jurisprudence in Morocco is not based on French law, but on the old Arabic system, unchanged since the days of Ali and Harun-al Raschid. The first question of the pasha on the bench is this: "How could you do that of which you stand accused?"

The answer of the accused comes in the same sing-song automatic way: "That of which I stand accused was Allah's will. Nothing happens in this world without Allah!"

That's a good answer, I think, for it puts an end to all argument, if the court is a consistent predestinationist. Alas, there is often a wide divergence between the theories and the practices of religion—not only in Morocco. Allah may be responsible for the acts of his creatures in the final Islamic analysis, but after all, you can't put Allah in jail, take his fingerprints and lock him up in a subterranean dungeon, as is done here with a man found guilty. All those attempts therefore, to throw the blame on Allah are just an empty formality, just as the shouts of the court attendants in the corridors trying to enjoin a little silence among the mass of arguing, yelling, gesticulating disputants and litigants, when the attendants cry: "The Angel Gabriel is writing down your words, oh believers, put a guard on your tongues!"

I must say frankly that although I have a tremendous respect for angels, I don't envy Gabriel his job, and if this court business goes on much longer with a thousand men all talking at the same time, I know Gabriel will be plad to end it all with the great trumpet blast on the last day, which, I now realize, will be something in the nature of a grand sigh of relief.

* * * *

Accused, Stand Up!

However, here we are. A black-eyed beauty comes up before the court, lifts her veil and looks the pasha bang in the face. This gentleman, in his white burnous lets his glances travel over her from head to foot, allows his eyes to linger on her golden ornaments and mutters: "How could you do that of which etc., etc.?" (Just as he might say: "It's hot in this courtroom. I wish I had a glass of iced lemonade.) The lady replies that it is all Allah's fault. It appears from the evidence that she has pulled her husband's beard and has given him a stiff hiding in the bargain. The husband, a little fat, squint-eyed runt, makes the accusation. He carefully unfolds his handkerchief and produces two or three hairs which he declares have been torn out of his chin and hands them over to the scribe, who sits next to the pasha.

Exhibit No. 1. The scribe holds the hairs up to the light and nods his head. Then he throws them on the floor. Next, the plaintiff starts to undress to show the court and the lawyers who stand around the blue and black marks on his body where, he says, the lady has scratched and pummeled him. As he does this, he bares his stomach which is of so peculiar a shape, something like a puffed-up sausage balloon, that everybody begins to laugh. Everybody crowds forward to look and to join in the fun. The judge and the scribe almost fall off their seats with laughter. But the plaintiff cries out in a high-pitched voice: "Why do you laugh, you fools? It's Allah's will!" He means, of course, that misshapen abdomen of his. Exhibit No. 2.

* * * *

Honors for Your Servant.

As the pleading begins, my interpreter translates and I get out a notebook to scratch down some of the more notable sallies of the lawyers.

The pasha on the bench interrupts the proceedings and invites me in French to come to take a seat by his side on the bench, which I accept, but not before my interpreter, the good Youssef ibn Avrahim, whispers to me: "Say you're unworthy! Say you're unworthy!"

"I say it: "Grand pasha," I say, "I do not deserve this singular honor!"

He answers with a phrase from the Koran: "Before Allah we are all equal!" but he fully expected the compliment and he welcomes me to the bench with a royal, patriarchal sweep of his fine long hands, as an emperor handing over a province to some vassal.

HEALTH TALKS

BY DR. WILLIAM BRADY

LOTS OF MEAT FOR BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

Whenever I stand up and take a shot at some hallowed old medical tradition my effrontery almost invariably brings a rebuke from some venerable colleague whose sense of propriety and the fitness of things is shocked by such rudeness. Or perhaps a clique of the old-timers get together and thrash me soundly in the editorial pages of the papers.

I don't mind that at all. In fact, I rather like it. Much better to have the big wigs protesting and calling you names than it is to be ignored. Proves they take you seriously, at any rate. But what burns me up is to get a long letter from some wiseacre layman who attempts to chide me and to point out patiently wherein I am obviously wrong—since my view or teaching fails to coincide with that of some long dead "authority."

Now when a medical or scientific man cites an authority we all understand what he means. He merely desires to name some one else who has advanced the same idea he is espousing or promoting. He certainly does not expect his medical or scientific audience to assume the thing must be so if somebody else has thought it might be so. But when the half-informed layman names an authority (likely as not some notorious charlatan or mail order faker) he obviously expects you will be quite crushed and incapable of carrying on. Well, so far as that goes, it is true for me. I can't carry on after that, not like a gentleman, anyway.

It is almost a tradition that persons with Bright's disease, chronic nephritis, bad kidneys, should have little or no meat, especially red or dark meat. Some self-sufficient laymen imagine this proscription includes even eggs, the whites of them at any rate, because, as these child-minded ones reason, white of egg is albumen and so . . . Just what it is about dark meat that makes such food so bad for one with kidney disease it is difficult to ascertain, but as I understand it such meat is chock full of uric acid and of course uric acid . . .

In a discussion of the treatment of common forms of dropsy, at the 1933 meeting of the New York State Medical Society, Dr. Nellis B. Foster said:

"Normal serum has a colloidal osmotic pressure of 30-40 cm. of water. When the albumen content of serum is reduced (as in nephrosis (kidney disease) and inanition especially), the osmotic pressure also falls. In hydropigenous (causing dropsy) nephritis the osmotic pressure is often below 20 and may be down to 10 cm. of water; edema (dropsy) is then a probable consequence. A high protein diet designed to replenish serum protein, as first advocated by Epstein, is now accepted as rational and scientific in the treatment of nephrosis (any kidney disease). But the earlier conception, that any form of Bright's disease was an indication for restriction of protein in the food, is hard to replace . . ."

Not that Dr. Foster is a greater "authority" than any of the eminent dead ones or the living you can name, I just wanted to assure you this idea of giving the kidney disease patient plenty of good meat is not merely one of my crazy notions.

News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON.

MOUNTAIN-MOVING WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—Secretary Morgenthau's own personal public works project, directed toward moving Man-Mountain O'Connor out of the treasury comptrollership, is reported to have failed.

Indeed, the chirping New Deal birdies say that the federal reserve board may even expunge from its record the fact that Treasury Secretary Morgenthau tried, and did offer Mr. O'Connor a $25,000-a-year job with the San Francisco bank.

A movement to erase the record has actually been started by Mr. O'Connor's pals. Apparently they consider it a blot of some kind or other. Although it is a secret record of the board.

In fact, the idea seems to be that everyone concerned will erase everything, including all those stories inspired by certain New Dealers from time to time, suggesting that Mr. Morgenthau would recommend to the next congress the abolition of Mr. O'Connor's job.

However, while all is now quiet on the O'Connor front and has been for weeks, no careful newsman will predict eternal peace. Erasers never work very well on men's memories.

MISTAKE It was all a mistake. At least it will be announced as such whenever the erasures are accomplished.

Apparently the guileless and innocent Mr. Morgenthau was misled by two of Mr. O'Connor's personal enemies, one in the treasury and one across the street from there. The one in the treasury is supposed to have personal feeling against Mr. O'Connor from bygone days when they were in North Dakota politics. The enmity of the enemy across the street is not so old, but it is, supposed to be more competitive.

At any rate, that is the story which is going to be told, and it will be sufficient.

Everyone concerned will breathe easier to have the matter settled, because it has caused more inner phenagling than all the other famous brotherly misunderstandings within the New Deal family, including Richberg vs. Johnson, Hull vs. Peek, et al.

HELP It may be that the Yuletide spirit seized the interested parties and filled them suddenly with brotherly love, but it is more likely that one James Aloysius Farley had a hand down deep in the proceedings.

There are many insiders who will tell you that Mr. Farley is the secret of Mr. O'Connor's success. Everyone knows Mr. O'Connor must have had some secret, because even a New Dealer of President Roosevelt's pre-eminent importance would have had difficulty withstanding the phalanx of inside opposition which was aligned against Mr. O'Connor.

You may score the play as a stolen base by Mr. O'Connor, an assist by Mr. Farley, an error by Mr. Morgenthau. But do it in pencil so it can easily be erased.

ADDENDA You can also be reasonably safe in declining to believe currently published yarns suggesting that Internal Revenue Commissioner Helvering may be transferred to the Kansas City reserve bank. He is to remain here under the same trade by which the New Deal keeps O'Connor. Credit Mr. Farley with an assist on that also.

It is evident that Mr. Farley is getting to be quite a fellow around town.

TROUBLE While the O'Connor-Morgenthau squabble in the New Deal has been settled, another inside row is bobbing up to take its place. The peace-making influence of the postmaster-general may be needed shortly in the AAA.

Nothing has leaked out about it yet, but a rather strong misunderstanding has arisen between liberal consumers' counsel, Frederick G. Howe, and canny Administrator Chester Davis.

At stake are a number of important policy questions, perhaps even the future existence of the consumers' counsel office, but the immediate issue revolves about the Chicago milk market.

Howe fought vigorously against a provision added to the milk license in that area. He contends it gives a virtual monopoly to the existing marketing agencies. The amendment has the effect of putting a ring around the market and barring all cream shipments from outside it. This, Howe contends, offers a chance for excessive price boosting by Chicago milk distributors and is an unfair deal for consumers.

Secretary Wallace signed the amendment on Davis' recommendation, but the inner fighting about it has just started.

REGRET At the White Sulphur Springs business conference last week, the officers in charge received the following wire: "I can write program to meet all problems. Rush expenses." It came from an Ohio man, not known to officials of the conference.

After reading comments by Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes on the program later adopted, the business leaders agree they should have accepted the offer.

When the Steamship Captain Is Jobless, He Can Pull a Rowboat

By Robert Quillen

Stanley Walker's "City Editor," a book enjoyed by laymen no less than newspapermen, reminds us that thousands of newspaper workers are now broke and jobless in the big towns.

They need not be jobless long if they have initiative and a taste for adventure.

There are thousands of towns in America that are too small to support a daily newspaper and yet large enough to support a daily sheet that has no expenses.

My father was a newspaperman who also knew how to set type. When the depression of populist days cut him adrift, he promptly moved to a smaller town, rented a dwelling, installed a hand press and a pocketful of type in the largest room, and within a week had become a full-fledged publisher.

The next Saturday afternoon he stood on the street, with a solid citizen to introduce him to the farmers, and garnered 30 subscribers at a dollar a head. It was a lot of money in those days.

In this day of mechanical wonders, the adventurer doesn't need type. All he needs is a borrowed typewriter and a mimeograph machine bought on credit.

Of course he can't print anything that resembles a newspaper. He will not compete with the daily papers in near-by cities, for he can't print popular features or telegraph news or any other kind of news that dailies print.

But he can attract friends and subscribers by printing a home-folksy, shirt-sleeve sheet that tells about Mrs. Smith's bridge party, the Joneses' new car, and the awful time the Browns had last night when the baby had the croup.

A hard-boiled metropolitan reporter might think it a prostitution of his talents to write such trivia, but he would at least have the satisfaction of producing something for which the nicest people have an insatiable appetite.

It wouldn't be dignified or glorious or immensely profitable, but it would be a lot of fun.

It can be done, for it is being done in several places. And, as Clark Gable says when feminine admirers ask him how he feels about kissing the lady stars: "It's a living."

LONG WILL RESUME WALMSLEY INQUIRY

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Huey Long's legislative investigation of the New Orleans city government of his arch-enemy, Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley, was reportedly due to be resumed here Friday and Saturday.

State Senator James A. Noe, of Monroe, said there last night, when asked about the report, that:

"When we started (the investigation) he had an agreement not to give out any statements to the newspapermen about the committee."

Trade Treaty With U.S. Seen Near by Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, Dec. 25.—(AP) Brazil views with satisfaction the prospect of concluding a commercial treaty with the United States before January 1, semi-official quarters said here today.

The position of her coffee on the North American market has been strengthened, it was said, as a result of the Brazilian government's decision to set aside 46 per cent of foreign exchange available from the sale of coffee to pay for imports from the United States.

Another advantage to Brazil is expected to be removal of restrictions, imposed because of asserted citrus diseases, on the shipment of Brazilian oranges through or into North American ports.

Brazil's assurances that proper precautions are being taken will be sufficient, it is felt, to obtain permission for landing or trans-shipment of oranges.

SUGAR STRIKE PARLEY FAILS TO BRING PEACE

BILLINGS, Mont., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Representatives of the Great Western Sugar Company and the striking union which for two weeks has tied up the beet sugar factory here, today announced preliminary conversations toward settlement of differences has been fruitless.

The strikers ask a 10 per cent wage increase and recognition of their union.

FAIR ENOUGH

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER

Marriage, Quick Divorce. NEW YORK, N. Y., Dec. 25. The pure, undying love of a beautiful woman, even on a short-term basis, appears to deserve rating as one of the most precious commodities on earth.

A handsome young woman, known as Miss June Knight, a musical comedy actress with moving picture tendencies, recently gave her heart to a man named Paul Ames, of New York, described as a broker and said to have an income of $2,400 a month.

Married one day in Chicago, they parted within two weeks and the disillusioned bride entered suit for a divorce in Los Angeles, demanding $1,200 a month for herself and $5,000 for her attorneys. Presumably, Miss Knight desires the $1,200 a month for herself until further notice. In that case, assuming that she should enjoy a long life of sorrow, say 40 years of solitary pining for that happiness which might have been but, due to no admitted fault of her own, never could be, the bill to Mr. Ames would be $576,000.

There is, of course, no way for one to know, until a jury has studied the values involved, whether Miss Knight's asking price is a trifle high. Her attorneys, being attorneys, should be in a better position to judge. They undoubtedly based their asking price on some knowledge of market conditions, prices and precedent. Love is a wonderful thing but mysterious and fragile so any appraisal in dollars and cents must be arbitrary. The N. R. A. has avoided the problem but the divorce attorneys have established a scale of their own which seems to operate rather well.

Well-Favored Young Woman. Miss Knight is a well-favored young woman, being tall, symmetrical and agreeable to the eye. It is possible that an index figure might be found in the normal box office charge for gazing at her. This comes to $4.40 per head for about 30 minutes of gazing in a New York theater. However, there are many other factors to affect the calculation. For example, the box office price must be divided by the number of other persons in the cast, including comedians. There is no accounting for tastes and some people would rather look upon a comedian than Miss June Knight. Perhaps Mr. Ames, himself, discovered that he liked comedy better.

But then, in a theater, at $4.40 per head, the customers do not have the exclusive privilege nor, unless they have seats in Row A, the proximity. Certainly there should be an extra charge for exclusiveness and proximity. So the financial formula for the appraisal of Miss June Knight's society for 13 days begins to go beyond any earth-bound, expense-account mathematical limitations.

Psychologies Differ. I hesitate to consider the equation from the standpoint of the disillusioned bride. The feminine psychology is different and she may feel that her shattered dreams are dirt cheap at $1,200 a month or $300 a week, until further notice. The trouble is that there is no set term in the transaction. Being symmetrical and generally agreeable to the masculine gaze, Miss Knight might meet another wonder-boy within the very year. Friendship ripening into love, the might marry him and let Mr. Ames off at one year's indemnity or $14,400 which would not be exhorbitant.

Yet, when a lady is receiving $1,200 a month for life, she might have an involuntary tendency to set herself against an onslaught from another quarter. The new suitor might be a poor man, unable to give her anything but love, and this could make a difference. The deterrant, is, in such a case, that if the lady should be disillusioned again, she would have no practical recourse. Ladies know this. Nobody ever loses a poor man $1,200 a month's worth and the attorneys fees down the lower brackets sometimes are as low as $25 per divorce by contrast with the asking price of $5,000 in the presence instance.

Your correspondent devoutly hopes that Miss Knight gets every dollar she earned in one day less than two weeks as the loving and loyal helpmate of Mr. Ames. No doubt she will, too. The honorable courts have many duties and not the least dignified of them is that of deciding how much a man ought to pay, in proportion to his fortune, for short-term enjoyment of the most precious privilege on earth, the pure, undying love of a beautiful woman.

the independence and of the vital interests of the United States was cunningly chosen," he asserted. "This intrigue to entangle the United States in the affairs of Europe was perpetrated at a time when the seventy-third congress was bent on winding up the session and going home—and when legislative bedlam was at its height. . . .

"No hearings were held on the resolution by the senate and house committees reporting the resolution. No witnesses appeared before the committees. A quorum was not present when the committees voted to report the measure. The resolution passed the senate without debate or explanation and without a roll call. The discussion of the resolution in the house was limited to 40 minutes—and was passed by a margin of four votes, obtained under the lash of the administration whip.

"Gross Perversion of Truth."

"All that was presented to the committees or to the house in support of the resolution was a letter from the secretary of labor which, among other things, stated: 'The organization is not even now an integral part of the League of Nations, and membership in the organization does not imply affiliation with the League. . . .'

"This statement is the grossest perversion of the truth. It is squarely contrary to the facts—facts established by an indelible record, the Treaty of Versailles. The statement contained in the letter of the secretary of labor was intended to deceive. The secretary knew that the congress of the United States was opposed to entry into the League of Nations and would not vote for entry knowingly. Entry was therefore made surreptitiously and fraudulently."

Roosevelt Turns From Holiday To Finish Drafting Message

GOVERNORS OF SOUTH REPORT 1934 PROGRESS

By GLENN RAMSEY,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Definite progress toward financial stability of state governments marked 1934 in the agricultural south.

Governors, reviewing the year, Tuesday generally expressed gratification over increased revenues, passage of laws to prevent further debts and improvement of credit.

Through laws controlling two of this section's principal crops—cotton and tobacco—and various monetary aids to farmers, the federal government contributed largely to the south's returning prosperity.

The states, however, took important steps, especially in Kentucky and Alabama, against further financial troubles coming from unpaid debts, by passing laws preventing contracting of additional debt.

"South Carolina," said Governor Ibra C. Blackwood, "has emerged from the worst financial condition in more than 50 years, and is now in better shape economically, socially and fiscally than in a very long period of time.

"She is enjoying credit and borrowing funds at 1 1-4 per cent interest in some cases.

"There was never a time in the history of South Carolina that the state enjoyed so many advantages."

Sales Tax and Kentucky.

Passage of the sales tax law has restored Kentucky's credit and made the state's financial paper as good an investment as any that can be found, said Governor Ruby Laffoon.

"During the year," he continued, "a financial code was enacted into law making it practically impossible for Kentucky to go further into debt and putting a tight rein on the state's purse strings.

"I truly believe Kentucky has made more progress during 1934 than in any other year."

Governor B. M. Miller, of Alabama, likewise reported enactment of legislation halting further debt making.

Hill McAlister, Tennessee's chief executive, said progress had been made in revision of state finances and the plan would be continued into the new year. "This stands at the head of all activities of my administration," said Governor McAlister.

"We have paid much on our state debt this year," Governor J. M. Futrell, of Arkansas, reported, "hope to pay more next year and eventually to wipe it out entirely. I believe the state's credit is rapidly being restored.

"Arkansas got its biggest problem—refunding of the $155,000,000 highway debt—out of the way in 1934, our revenues increased beyond all expectations and we look with more confidence on 1935.

Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus, of North Carolina, said the state had a very definite line on its present situation and made some definite readjustments, "all of which have made us feel that substantial progress has been made and we are on our way back to recovery."

"The state," he said, "has paid its debts when payments were due, has met its obligations and is now on a sound financial basis."

Governor Eugene Talmadge says the "record speaks for itself" in Georgia, where ad valorem taxes were cut one mill by the state, auto tags were continued at $3 and the highway department was ordered to save $2,000,000 to be diverted by the January legislature to aid schools and Confederate pensioners.

Generally improved business conditions throughout the state, was the report of Governor Dave Sholtz, of Florida. The 1933-34 tourist season, which extended into May, was described by the governor as the "best since the boom" and indications were for a "bigger and better" season in 1934-35.

"Progress" in Louisiana.

"The state has made great progress during 1934," said Governor O. K. Allen, of Louisiana, "and will continue to do so in 1935, particularly in the field of oil development. We received as state royalties about $800,000 from oil leases in 1934 and believe this will be higher in 1935."

During the year under Governor Sennett Conner's administration, Mississippi saw the sales tax produce more than a quarter of a million dollars above budget estimates on the basis of figures made public in mid-December. Combined with other taxes the state's revenue was more than $1,000,000 above budgetary estimates.

Governor George C. Peery, of Virginia, confined his statement to expressing a hope that the new year will "witness solution of many of our economic problems with continued improvement in prosperity. Industry must give its help to absorbing unemployment" and struck vigorously at the bootlegger, urging co-operation with the alcoholic beverage control board which operates the state liquor dispensaries.

BOOTLEGGER IS ASSAILED IN MESSAGE BY PEERY

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Governor George C. Peery today had a merry Christmas wish for everybody in Virginia except the bootlegger at whom he struck vigorously in a plea for law enforcement.

In a Christmas Day message to the citizens of his state the governor expressed himself as grateful for many things and hopeful that the "new year will witness a solution of many of our economic problems with a continued improvement in prosperity."

His season's greetings for the bootlegger were put like this:

"I would like to make one specific appeal to the people of Virginia for the new year.

"The law for state control of the sale of intoxicating beverages set up by the general assembly pursuant to a vote of the people has been in operation less than a year. The object of the law is to promote temperance and outlaw the bootlegger. The alcoholic beverage control board has gotten off to a fine start. The problem is being handled in a sound and businesslike way. It is essential to the success of the plan that the new law be strictly enforced. Failure to enforce the law exists in some localities. As I see it, there is an abiding duty on all good citizens not only to obey the law, but to help in its enforcement. Respect for obedience to the law are absolutely essential.

"My plea is that a united effort on the part of enforcement officials and our citizens in general be made for law enforcement throughout the entire state."

The governor said the past year has brought "to us in Virginia problems common to all."

Chief among them he mentioned those incident to relief and unemployment. He added that through contributions from the federal government, the work on the highway department and local contributions the situation has been met and "conditions today are better than they were a year ago."

He said Virginians had escaped destructive drouths that came to other parts of the nation, and nature had yielded bountiful crops. These crops, he said, were sold at better prices than prevailed a year ago.

"We have not suffered the results of violence that occurred in other sections in connection with labor troubles," he continued.

"All essential state activities have been continued. The education of the children in our public schools has gone without interruption. The morale of our people shows a decided improvement. And so, we take courage and go on.

"We hope the new year will witness a soltuion of many of our economic problems, with continued improvement in prosperity. Industry must give its help in absorbing unemployment, and all of us must lend a helping hand to those less fortunate in these critical times."

President Resumes Work After Attending Special Church Services With Family Members.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—President Roosevelt turned from Christmas observance tonight to finish drafting his message to the new congress—perhaps the most important of his declarations since his inaugural nearly two years ago.

Some of his advisers believe he will propose what they consider a "moderate legislative program" along with an enunciation of policy which they expect will guide the "New Deal" from the emergency to a permanent phase.

Unemployment and social security problems are understood to dominate his message.

Thursday the president will go over the final draft of his message with his immediate aids and, in all probability, with congressional leaders.

There is every indication Mr. Roosevelt is determined to provide work as a method of relief rather than outright doles from the treasury.

This indicates a continuance of emergency expenditures which probably will offset immediate plans of a balanced budget. Those who have talked with the president are convinced, however, that he will continue his efforts to bring a balance between government income and expenditures as soon as possible, as recommended by the business conference.

Jobless Insurance Plan.

As for social security he will definitely recommend a state-controlled and federally-sponsored unemployment insurance plan.

Despite a movement on Capitol Hill for old age pensions, some close to the White House believe the president will recommend further study of this proposition before reaching a definite conclusion to legislation on it.

Committees and commissions have been at work for months compiling information on subects concerning every phase of economic life.

Among reports filed are those from the social security committee, the national resources board, the federal railroad co-ordinator and the aviation commission.

Mr. Roosevelt has studied these reports and his ideas on them will be given congress.

Attends Christmas Services.

Leading the nation in its religious worship, President Roosevelt and his household spent more than an hour and a half today in Christmas church and communion service.

With a half-hundred embassies observing the day in accordance with the religious and other customs of their own countries, the national capital made a vivid cross-section of the whole world's Christmas.

The day was fair and mild. Large crowds collected in the street about Gothic St. Thomas church, both for the arrival and leave-taking of the large presidential family.

It took a fleet of cars to carry them and their secret service escort. Included in the churchgoing party were Mrs. Roosevelt, wearing black; the president's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt; his half sister, Mrs. J. R. Roosevelt; blonde Anna Dall wearing a close little hat with nose veil, and her children, "Sistie" wearing a little green beret and green coat; "Buzzie" in a blue coat over blue sailor suit; Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, whose little daughter Sara had been left at the White House, and the two tall sons from Harvard, Franklin Jr. and John.

Section Reserved.

A section of seats in the midst of the congregation, instead of the president's usual far-front pew, had been reserved for them. The president walked down the long church aisle on the arm of his son James.

The Christmas theme he gave to the country last night was "courage and unity." The theme he heard today was spiritual peace.

His pastor, the silver-haired Rev. C. Earnest Smith, read again the simple Christmas story of shepherds watching their flocks by night, and drew from it the lesson that peace may prevail in human hearts in spite of bitternesses between nations, and strife between classes.

The church walls within are of gray stone, its vaulted ceilings beamed. On its white altar today red poinsettias in silver vases, on either side the silver cross, and two untrimmed evergreen trees told their Christmas story as simply as the pastor told his.

Dr. Smith and his assistant brought the bread and the wine of the communion service to the president and Mrs. Roosevelt. Other members of the family joined in the observance of the congregation, going quietly together to the altar.

Many a "Merry Christmas" was called from the crowd as the White House cars—the president's open as usual—sped back to the family celebration. The president bowed and smiled and waved his hand, and Mrs. Roosevelt called back "Merry Christmas!"

SLAYING IS TERMED "MURDER FOR PROFIT"

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Murder for profit was the most plausible explanation police could find today for the slaying last Saturday of George Ericksen, 46-year-old tavern keeper.

Ericksen's wife, Anna, 43, his son, George Jr., 17, and four men are being held for questioning as a result of a confession which police said they had been given by James Senese, 19.

Senese, police asserted, told them Mrs. Anna Ericksen offered him $300 to kill her husband so she could collect on a $2,000 insurance policy of which she is beneficiary.

NEWSPAPERMAN HURT IN SANTIAGO BOMBING

SANTIAGO, Cuba, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Alberto Garcia, Santiago correspondent of the Associated Press, was gravely wounded shortly after midnight, together with five others, by a bomb which exploded in the home of Enrique Comas here.

They were in the midst of a Christmas Eve supper feast.

The others wounded included Comas, three of his sons and Pedro Querra.

Police arrested Luis Colas, accusing him of the bombing. No motive for the act was given.

INSURANCE EXECUTIVE PASSES AT ALBANY

George M. Parks, of Massachusetts Mutual Company, Dies Suddenly.

ALBANY, Ga., Dec. 25.—(AP)—George Mansfield Parks, 69, of Providence, R. I., died last night at his recently completed hunting lodge near here. The prominent insurance man's death was caused by angina pectoris and came after an illness of only a few hours.

Mr. Parks had come here for the winter season about a week ago, having chosen this locality for a winter home after paying several visits to Albany during the past year. Several friends from the east were en route here for a hunting party when word of Mr. Parks' death reached them in North Carolina.

Mr. Parks was general agent for and a director of the Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Company. He also was a director of the Industrial Trust and Banking Company, of Providence, and was widely known in his home state for his philanthropies.

The body will be sent at once to his boyhood home in Pittsfield, Maine, for funeral services and interment Friday. He was a bachelor and is survived by a brother, O. F. Parks, of Pittsfield, and a niece, Mrs. Winthorpe Winslow, of Providence.

HARVEY AND SMITH GREET MACON CHIEF

MACON, Ga., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Whereabouts of Aubrey Smith, sought vainly by police for several days last week, became known this morning when Police Chief Ben T. Watkins received a Christmas greeting telegram signed jointly by Smith and Leland Harvey.

The wire was sent from Harvey, Ill., where apparently the two are spending the holiday season, far from the hue and cry that was raised last week when Atlanta police developed a suspicion against the pardoned pair.

Presumably Smith is no longer wanted, since Harvey's release.

The message the two filed follows: "We wish we were there to wish in person to you (Chief Watkins), Mr. Garrett (detective chief) and all your force a merry, merry Christmas and happy New Year."

Committee Attacks Army Base Collections

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—The house military committee today charged war department officials were "woefully" lacking in protecting the government's interests in collecting but 59 cents from the Mercur Corporation, which has been operating a $11,000,000 army base at Newark, New Jersey.

The committee has been conducting an investigation into war department contracts and procurement transactions. It recommended that Mercur Corporation be held to a "strict accounting in the courts."

The justice department neared completion of a separate study of the situation. Assistant Attorney-General Harry Blair said he would make recommendations to the attorney-general next week.

The Mercur Corporation organized with $5,000 paid-in capital stock, was given a war department contract November 27, 1926, to operate the property. The government was to receive 90 per cent of the net profit.

Han Min-fa, commander of the fifteenth regiment of the third infantry brigade of Manchukuo, was the name given for one of the prisoners, both of whom are held on espionage charges.

CAPITALISM DOOMED, SAYS BRITISH WRITER

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—E. St. John Strachey, noted British writer, arrived in New York for a visit today with the declaration the future course of the world is "either communism or chaos."

Capitalism, he said, "is in a steady decline. What has happened in England has also happened in America. There is increased interest in the principles laid down by Karl Marx."

Of the American scene, the writer said:

"President Roosevelt is politically clever, but the inevitable results will be disastrous. If there had not been relief, you would have had revolution. I won't know until I have traveled across your country, but offhand I'd say all these measures now being taken do the capitalistic system no good."

One-Way Street

BY JOSEPH McCORD

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

Spencer Cannon, Gorham's leading citizen, finding too little time to attend to his diversified interests, has just made Mark Sturges manager of the Iron Block, the city's foremost department store, which his father founded—the cornerstone of the growing Cannon fortune. Cannon's daughter, Edythe, who has been away, strolls into Mark's office, introduces herself and tells him he is to be a Sunday supper guest at Arden Terrace, the Cannon home.

Her father enters with some papers as they talk and in Mark's presence tells him "that Sawyer girl" is working in the dress department. Father and daughter go to Emory Stewart, head of the department, and Cannon instructs him to get rid of Jean Sawyer at once. Jean, who is sketching models for display ads, sees the Cannons, goes at once to Stewart and says she must quit her job at once. Stewart is remonstrating with her when Mark enters Stewart tells Mark what has happened, says Cannon gave him no chance to explain, and that Jean has been doing good work. Replying to Stewart's question, Mark says Cannon gave him entire control over the store's personnel and asks Jean why she is determined to quit. Politely she refuses to answer. He tells her he needs her help and wants her to remain so that he can establish his authority over the personnel. Pressed by Mark for the reason for her persistent refusal to answer, Jean finally says that her father is in the penitentiary.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT V.

Ignoring the half-proffered hand, Sawyer passed his arm about the lad's shoulders and gave him a quick embrace. He would not embarrass the boy with a kiss, much as he longed to. "Good-bye, son. I'm depending on you to look after your mother and the girls."

There came the sound of a door closing violently. Jean was alone with her parents.

"I think we should start now," Mrs. Sawyer announced quietly. "It's nine thirty."

"Starting? Where?" Jean asked in surprise. She stood close to her father, her arm about him. Treasuring these last minutes.

"To the courthouse," was the calm reply.

"Oh, but mumsy!"

"It will be better than having some one tell me . . . later. You don't mind, John?"

"No, dear. It shall be as you wish."

Sawyer even managed a smile, regarding the small woman with a tender gaze. He already knew of that decision, whispered during the long hours of the night. "How about you, Bunkie? Will you go with your mother? I . . . I'll not be coming back, you know."

"Yes, Daddy Jack."

The court procedure was mercifully brief. Judge Griffith summed up the case tersely, peering over his spectacles now and then at the defendant. Jean noticed the lenses of the judge's glasses were cut in half, making a straight line under the piercing black eyes.

Then her heart began to hammer strangely. Judge Griffin was talking about Daddy Jack. He spoke of the excellent character the defendant always had enjoyed, his devotion to his employers . . . the court was "constrained to take those things into consideration."

Perhaps . . . oh, perhaps!

"John Sawyer, have you anything to say before sentence is passed upon you?"

"No, your honor."

"Then it is the sentence of this court that you be confined in the state penitentiary for a term of six years. At hard labor."

John Sawyer drew a deep breath. It was over. A sheriff's deputy touched him on the arm. One last cheerful smile to his wife and daughter.

It was Jean who chose the family's new home on Bridge street. Over on the unfamiliar West Side, a section populated mainly by shop workers and small merchants.

True to his promise, Don had arranged an interview for Jean with Nate Wardlaw, supervisor of the Times' advertising staff.

"I'm not sure but what we can use you, Miss Sawyer," Wardlaw told her after a brief talk. "We've been thinking about breaking in a local girl . . . women's wear and that sort of thing. You might do it very well. How old are you, if you don't mind?"

"Seventeen. It's nearer eighteen now."

"Finish high school?"

"Almost . . ." It was a little difficult to keep her voice steady. She had dreaded something of this sort. "I left school shortly before graduation."

"Amounts to the same thing. It's like this, Miss Sawyer," Wardlaw went on pleasantly. "Soliciting advertising is a matter of personality to some extent. But it's mostly using common sense. You can do it or you can't. And it won't take either one of us long to find out. Think it over a few days and come back to see me."

"Thank you. I will."

How nice Mr. Wardlaw was, Jean thought, as she left the building. He knew about Daddy Jack. He must have. Perhaps Don had done something to help. Would others be as thoughtful? She already had made up her mind to accept the position.

Within the week, she reported for her new duties. There was a "course of sprouts to take," as Wardlaw expressed it. After that, she would be sent out to see what she could do. The interval of training proved less of an ordeal than Jean feared. She was conscious of curious stares, some little diffidence at first on the part of the girls and women. But she did her best to mask her sensitiveness under an air of quiet composure.

That attitude had grown unconsciously when the time came to visit Gorham's shops in an endeavor to establish a clientele of space buyers.

Wardlaw was a shrewd judge. In that first interview he decided that Jean had the necessary refinement—good looks, too. Plenty of appeal, if she had the right approach to back it up. Time proved she possessed both. Lesser merchants, with whom she made her first contacts, liked her. She developed the knack of writing copy with a pull.

The new sense of responsibility gave her a quiet air of authority when it came to selecting a suitable home.

"It's such a small house," Mrs. Sawyer observed doubtfully, as she and Jean completed a final tour of the bare and echoing rooms of the Bridge street dwelling. "Do you really think we can manage comfortably here?"

"It will do nicely, Mumsy," Jean said. "It's just nice walking distance from the office. That's important."

"I'm afraid, dear, you will find all this rather difficult. It's going to be different . . . I mean you'll be so far from all your friends."

"They will find me . . . if they want to," Jean replied, with an assurance she was far from feeling. "I shall be too busy to do much entertaining. I'm a business woman," she smiled. "About to take part in a lease signing . . . by watching you do it."

"Looking after such a little place will be play," Mrs. Sawyer told Jean, as they strolled back to Oak street arm in arm. "I believe we'll find it very cozy when we are settled."

That same evening, in the seclusion of her dainty room, Jean bade a resolute farewell to the past and its associations. She lingered longest over her beloved books in their case. Most of these old friends must go with her. No one would ever know how passionately she had pored over their pages, of the hours of romantic dreaming. They were a part of her being.

From now on, there would be two worlds. One of cold realities, one of romance. A business life loomed now as the great adventure. But some day . . . Who knew?

With a sigh, she sat down on the floor to "house-clean" the lower drawer of her dresser. As she lifted out a part of its contents, a sigh escaped her. There lay her diploma, wrapped in tissue paper—never unrolled or read.

It had come to her through the mails, accompanied by a kindly note from her principal stating that the general excellence of her work had resulted in a vote of the board to include her name among the graduates. It was printed, too, in the stories of the commencement exercises carried by the papers. Jean read the account with tears of disappointment rolling down her cheeks.

"Reading of Class Prophecy . . . Edythe Cannon." It always had been "Edith"—until this year.

No time for old hurts now.

Don Browne furnished Jean with almost the one remaining link to Oak street. He was a frequent visitor in the new home on the West Side where he was a favorite with all the members of the family.

For all his careless ways, Don had a keen sense of appreciation. He realized better than anyone, unless it were Mrs. Sawyer, how lonely Jean was. He likewise was canny enough to avoid any manifestation of sympathy or sentiment. He made it his first concern to be a pal to the girl, and she was deeply grateful.

Jean's romantic dreams were steadfastly reserved for hours of solitude and reflection.

Don frequently had a place in these quiet musings. Jean was wont to speculate frankly about her feeling towards him. He meant more to her than anyone outside the little family circle. She knew that and wondered if he might sometime measure up to her lofty ideals. He was so gay and utterly irresponsible. Perhaps he would grow up . . . and she disliked the idea of that.

At all events, he was "very comfortable."

Occasionally, Jean was moved to tell him so when they went to the movies—sitting in the gallery—or indulged in the luxury of a soda. Jean always paid her own way, in spite of Don's outraged feelings. "Dutch treat or nothing" was her motto. The Times was not overgenerous to its reporters.

Her new duties brought long and busy days so that Jean made little or no effort to become acquainted with the home neighborhood.

Bridge street was a short and somewhat drab thoroughfare. It was distinguished only for its unbroken rows of two-story dwellings, each with a flight of front steps, which launched themselves on the lumpy sidewalks at independent angles.

In mild weather, these treads of white limestone or painted wood held coatless—if not shirtless—men who smoked stolidly or scanned their newspapers after the day's toil. Housewives with untidy hair or in boudoir caps contributed to an animated forum. Swarms of children darted about like schools of young fish, save that they filled the air with unceasing clamorings.

In winter, the street became strangely quiet as early dusk blanketed the low roof tops. The homes acquired a mellow tone in the smoky twilight or under the frosty rays of city lamps. Lighted windows gleamed warmly. Snatches of radio programs filtered out on the air with the opening and closing of street doors.

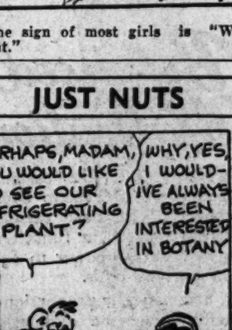

The few squares always affected Jean with a distinct depression. She could feel it the moment she turned the corner from the wide avenue that led directly home from the Times building. Perhaps it was the sign at the intersection: "One Way Street."

Something sinister in the suggestion.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

MAKING A SCRAPBOOK.
I—The Paper and Covers.

(Note: Because we are close to the beginning of a new year in which a scrapbook may be kept, Uncle Ray today starts a short series giving hints for making one.)

Will you keep a scrapbook during 1935?

Thousands of boys and girls, and grown folks, too, have made scrapbooks composed of our "Corner" stories. The number is great; but it does not include all of our readers. In the year which is "dawning new," I should like to see many more join our merry throng.

Cutting paper for scrapbook pages.

Readers tell me they have found great enjoyment in keeping scrapbooks; and some school children say their scrapbooks have helped them "get high marks." One mother writes that she is keeping a scrapbook for her little daughter, who is too young to read now but who will find use for the clippings after entering school.

Scrapbooks may be obtained at stores; and a person may pay several dollars for one, or as little as a dime—depending on what kind he buys. Many readers, however, would rather make their own books. It can be done with little or no expense.

If you make your own, the first problem will be paper. You may, if you like, use any paper which is about the house. Many have made fine use of rolls of leftover wall paper. Others use wrapping paper, which they cut to the size of the sheet desired. When possible, I suggest the use of drawing paper or other heavy paper. It is best for the sheets to be thick, and not easily torn.

The paper should be cut to a size large enough to hold from two to four of our Corner stories on each page. A sheet size of 10 inches by 12 inches has been used by some readers; while others have pages 12 by 18. Take your own choice; but try a sample page first, and place some clippings on it (without pasting them down) in order to learn how the size will please you.

After deciding on the proper size, cut about 40 sheets to that size. You may add to the number later, as your scrapbook grows.

For a cover, heavy cardboard or flexible cardboard will do very well. Flexible cardboard will bend without breaking. Cut two pieces of cardboard to the same size you have chosen for the paper or, if you like, make the cardboard pieces about a quarter of an inch longer and wider than the sheets of paper.

Next time, we shall take up the method of fastening sheets and covers together, and of pasting in the clippings.

(For general interest section of your scrapbook.)

The "Surprise Leaflet" will be mailed without charge to readers who send me a 3c stamped, return envelope. This leaflet contains riddles, and tells how to perform magic tricks.

'CLOUDS LIFTING,' SAYS KING GEORGE

Budget With Surplus Cited as Year's Economic Feat in Annual Message.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—England counted herself today as nearing the completion of a proud year, economically and politically, but heard a warning from the king that "we have still our own anxieties to meet."

From a little room in Sandringham, King George in his annual Christmas message to the empire struck the keynote of the closing year.

"The world is still restless," he said, "and troubled, but the clouds are lifting."

Many nations, including the United States, were watching Britain even as the king spoke, learning the lessons to be gained from her progress toward recovery.

A budget with a surplus was probably the outstanding economic and financial feat of the year, and there are indications that there will be a similar budget next year.

Industry Progresses.

Reaching out with balm in many hands, the national government has made many forward strides in assisting industry, agriculture, shipping and trade, and has paved the way for better health and housing.

The year has seen England step out into European continental politics with a vigor that was unexpected and significant.

Stanley Baldwin, lord president of the council, sent a thrill through Europe by a declaration that England's frontier is no longer the chalk cliffs of Dover but the Rhine.

While opposition political quarters at home regarded the statement as sales talk for larger home defenses, continental circles interpreted it as an indication that Britain is now firmly tied to the affairs of Europe.

But perhaps the most significant move of all was that recently when Anthony Eden, on instruction from Sir John Simon, gave British troops to the council of the League of Nations for use in keeping peace in the Saar.

It marked a complete reversal of policy of this government and did more to bring Germany and France closer together than probably anything else.

Tired of War Talk.

Diplomatic quarters viewed this remarkable move as indisputable evidence that Britain, tired of war talk, is determined to be the big coming influence in Europe, especially since this country followed up that action with stern advice to Hungary and Yugoslavia.

There were two other great separate features in this English year.

A report of a special parliamentary commission urged far-reaching constitutional reform in India, and steps are now being taken to push through a bill which will give the millions of that vast land a measure of home rule in an experiment in self-government that knows no precedent.

The Duke of Kent was married to Princess Marina, of Greece, in the most expensive and dramatic wedding in the 25 years of the reign of King George, an event that captured the imagination of the entire world.

John Bull's diary thus was written pleasantly full this year, and it stands as a challenge to the other nations of the world.

England is happily confident of the future—many say there is more confidence now than any time since 1929.

It was the merriest Christmastide England had known for a long time.

EL PASO OFFICERS ARE SANTA TO TOT OF JAILED MOTHER

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 25.—(AP)—She hugged her dolls with chubby arms today and didn't seem to see the jail bars.

But they were there. The mother clutched them as she watched the tiny tot.

Lucille Cook—she's 4—smiled at her dolls and thanked Santa Claus. She knew he would come to see her even in the El Paso county jail.

The mother, Lucille Cook, forced smiles when the tot shouted her delight. Why was she there? Christmas was only a day off and her baby needed shoes—badly.

Officers charged she forged a check to get them. They placed her in jail on Christmas Eve.

The baby came along too, but Santa Claus found her new address.

Perhaps he asked kindly officers of the sheriff's department to fill her stockings. And maybe they did.

Less than three hours later, Wentzel was dead. He had slipped and fallen between two moving freight cars.

CHECK TAX REVIVAL DECLARED UNLIKELY

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—People who pay by check will get a break next Tuesday when the 2-cent tax on checks expires.

This tax produced $41,383,198 last fiscal year, but the opinion is expressed in many quarters on Capitol hill that it will not be revived.

Some house members, however, have received intimations that congress may be asked to levy new taxes on other things—though a decision on their nature, these legislators understand, will not be made until the administration completes its budget and relief plans.

HOLLYWOOD FASHIONS

By MOLLIE MERRICK

Fay Wray's way: The film actress is showing London her Hollywood wardrobe, including this dinner dress with a tunic of silver bugle beads and a skirt of black satin. With it she wears a gay red sash and red satin sandals.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 25.—Fay Wray, now in London, left with a stunning wardrobe full of Hollywood frocks. Black and white predominated as a combination in Fay's dresses, both for street and evening wear.

Her favorite dinner dress had a tunic of silver bugle beads and a skirt of heavy black satin. The tunic was cut high in the neck in front and featured a "two-length peplum," which hung lower in back than in front.

Way tied a brilliant red sash about the waist line of this frock and completed the effect with red satin sandals.

And next in Hollywood predictions that are somewhat different comes the announcement by Kalloch, designer for Columbia, that high-laced shoes are on the very verge of becoming popular. Heaven forbid, we may be moved to say.

But why not? After all the old-time styles that are used in modernized forms today. Yet high-laced shoes have always suggested Sadie Thompson to us, and while that girl was certainly a vital, fascinating character, we have never thought of her as a mannequin.

Kalloch's contention is that the hair piled high and the skirts formfitted to below the knees aren't a bit more "Gibson girlish" than the high shoes. And he's probably right.

In case anyone is interested in the fashion war that has been waged for some time between Hollywood and Paris, with the cinema city well in the lead, let me tell you that certain French silk houses feel that the prestige gained by having their wares appear in American films make up for the necessity of holding all silk of like pattern until the move is generally released throughout the United States.

And that ought to show which way the fashion wind blows at present!

Carole Lombard's newest evening gown is of black mousseline de soie, sprinkled with huge midnight blue paillettes. A black satin slip is worn under the frock and a short jacket, entirely covered with the blue paillettes, is worn with it.

Shoes are of midnight blue satin. And if this color scheme seems a bit trying to you, remember that Carole Lombard's fresh blond beauty can get away with such trifles.

Hollywood is sold on muffs for afternoon and evening wear. Most smart evening coats have tiny round muffs to be worn with them, and some of the more daring formal afternoon coats are worn with the huge square muffs that were popular some years ago.

Mary Ellis worked out a smart idea when she had a melon-shaped ermine muff made to match an evening wrap of ermine, and a black velvet dinner ensemble which is trimmed in ermine bands. Quite an idea, this last, and one that could be used with any type of fur.

Claudette Colbert has a new dinner ring guaranteed to harmonize with any frock she wears.

It's of real crystal, with a thick band of rubies across the top. This is a poor description of what is really an amazing ring; one that gives the effect of red rather than the white of the crystal.

Home, Mother and Presents Gloria Vanderbilt's Christmas

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—It was home, mother and presents—piles of them—for little Gloria Vanderbilt this Christmas Day.

The 10-year-old heiress to millions, carrying an armload of gifts, went early today to the town house of her beautiful mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt.

There she spent the day like thousands of other girls, unwrapping presents with cries of joy. She had gifts for her mother, for her aunt, Lady Furness, and for her 5-year-old cousin, Tony, Lady Furness' son.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, who has battled her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, in vain for custody of her daughter, would not say what Gloria gave her.

"But it pleased me very much. I'll tell you that."

Gloria arrived at the Vanderbilt house on East Seventy-escond street, off Fifth avenue, around 5 o'clock in a Whitney limousine. She hurried to the door. A butler had it open for her the minute the automobile stopped at the curb.

There were holly wreaths in all the windows. The twinkling lights of a Christmas tree could be seen inside.

At 10 o'clock, Mrs. Vanderbilt, Lady Furness and the two children left house, got into another limousine, sped down Fifth avenue to the St. Francis church, on Thirty-first street, and attended mass.

St. Francis is a church of the Franciscan monks. After the mass, the Vanderbilts and their kin went to an adjoining chapel and listened for 10 minutes or so to carols, sung by a group of the monks.

Then, back home for Christmas dinner.

The rest of the day was spent quietly at home.

Late in the afternoon, the Whitney limousine pulled up again at the curb. Little Gloria hurried out, a bodyguard loaded a pile of gifts in the limousine, and the child was driven back to the Whitney home.

She stays with her aunt—the sister of Gloria's father, the late Reginald Vanderbilt—five days a week. On week-ends, henceforth, she will be with her mother—pending the outcome of Mrs. Vanderbilt's appeal from the order of Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew.

Photos of Celebrities of Long Ago Being Collected by New Yorker

An interesting insight into social history of the past can be gleaned from the personalities of old-time theatrical stars such as Lillie Langtry, long a favorite of King Edward VII until she playfully slipped some ice down his majesty's back, thus abruptly terminating the monarch's interest in this charming actress.

Collecting photographs of the stars of other days has become a popular hobby, writes Harold Seton, of 150 East 39 street, New York, whose collection is among the most complete in that city.

In the days before movies and more later talkies brought plays almost to the doorstep of every little villager all the great stage artists played in Atlanta, the scene of many theatrical triumphs of such stars as Booth, Sothern, Jefferson and others.

Mr. Seton is anxious to get in touch with anyone in Atlanta who has old photographs and would like to compare notes or exchange specimens. His collection is limited to "cabinet size" pictures mounted on pasteboard, not the larger unmounted photographs that gained favor in later years, nor prints, books, magazines or program pictures.

Group To Hail New Year At Top of Pike's Peak

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Once again welcome to the new year will be written in color and fire against the wintry sky above Pike's peak at midnight next Monday night.

Even though the summit of the peak should be cloaked in a snowstorm, members of the Adaman Club of Colorado Springs will climb to the top and with fireworks and bombs hail the unveiling of 1935.

Members of the club took time off from their Christmas celebrations today to declare this year's pyrotechnical display 14,100 feet above the sea will be the most spectacular since the club was organized in 1922.

In past years the fireworks "show" has been seen as far as 100 miles.

MISSISSIPPI YOUTH KILLED BY PLAYMATE

GULFPORT, Miss., Dec. 25.—(AP) John Cook, 14, was fatally wounded by his 15-year-old playmate, James Joyner, yesterday, while the pair of boys were on a hunting trip just outside of this town shooting birds.

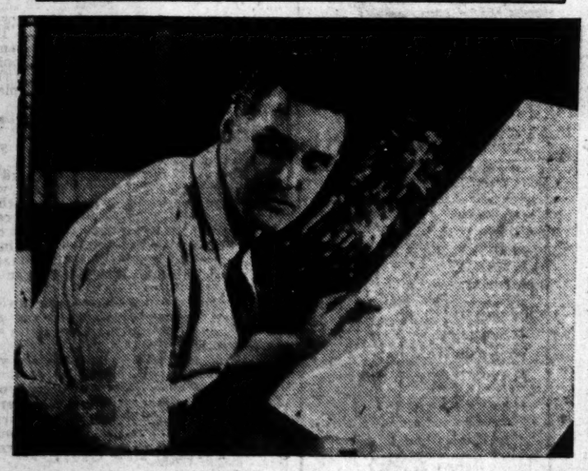

Joyner fired a 22-caliber cartridge from his rifle at a dead bird hanging from a limb and it entered Cook's body at his neck, according to police. Cook died at a local hospital three hours later.

"Estimated New 1935 Dodge to be Worth Many Dollars Over Actual Price," says Russell Patterson; "So Much Style and Smartness Fooled Me."

"I know good looks when I see them," says Russell Patterson, famous artist, illustrator and beauty authority, "so it's no wonder that I guessed the price of the new 1935 Dodge too high.

"It's so smartly designed, has such trim modern lines that I guessed it would be a pretty high-priced car. I'll admit I never dreamed a car so good looking could be sold at such a low price."

Value authorities, style experts, purchasing agents—all have been fooled trying to guess the price of the new 1935 Dodge. They say it is so packed with value they cannot believe their own ears when they hear how little it costs. Watch for this new Dodge!

Crimson Tide Holds Christmas Workout on Rose Bowl Field

Stanford's Butterfly Defense Is a Daffy One

PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 25.—On one of the verandas of the Huntington hotel there is always sunshine, and so it was there, while looking on at the mass of flowers and oranges and wishing a cool Christmas Day breeze might blow, that a couple of butterflies came dancing along in the sun.

And what has that got to do with the Rose Bowl game? Nothing at all except that it calls to mind the defense which the Stanfords employ, the butterfly defense.

I do not think any of the teams in our town have ever employed the butterly defense. Although at that I have heard some of them wish they could equip their ends with butterfly nets when they go down to tackle some of the smart kick receivers. And once I heard a coach say the only way his ends could halt a running game was to dig pits in front of them.

But this is the butterfly defense: The two tackles play back on defense, back about three yards. And they flutter about, if you get what I mean, especially the fellow who is on the strong side.

None of the Stanfords looks like a butterfly. Because I have just delved into the statistics and find that 27 members of the Stanford team are six feet or more tall. And that 17 of the squad weigh 195 pounds or more each. They think they have the two best ends in football, the greatest blocking back in Bones Hamilton and the best ball carrier in Bob Grayson. They also credit this same Bones Hamilton with more than passing ability in football.

These are not pleasant things on which to think on a sunny Christmas Day. But then they are true things.

AND WHAT A BUTTERFLY.

And what an amazing sight this butterfly defense is to see!

It really leaves but four men on the line of scrimmage. Just four. Because the center drops back a bit and floats.

Even you and I can figure out that with the tackles and center back, only the two ends and the guards are left. It looks something like this, with the offense lined against it; only the lines being diagrammed:

XXXOXXX
X X X X
O
X X

The two ends and guards are on the line, the center is back just a bit and loose, so to speak. Behind them, of course, are the defensive backfield men. When the offense is using an unbalanced line, instead of balanced as diagramed, the offense merely shifts.

The value of this is that it makes it almost impossible to block out the tackles. The tackles are back there and can't be blocked out in normal fashion. They, plus the loose center, close in on any line play. Where a blocker follows the runner through on a line play he is usually slowed up by the center so the tackles can come in and get the ball.

It also gives the defense an extra man back there on forward passes, especially the short ones.

This is the defense which Pop Warner designed to use against the Notre Dame type of offense. It didn't work so well for Pop in the Rose Bowl the year he had the great Ernie Nevers and his championship team. Because, you see, that year Knute Rockne brought his great Notre Dame team out. It included the Four Horsemen.

The Four Horsemen kicked the Warner team around, butterfly defense and all, to win, 27 to 10.

I have tried it out on Coach Frank Thomas. I came upon him suddenly the other day and yelled "Butterfly" at him, but he only came over and asked if I was all right and did I need anything. He didn't jump.

But, at any rate, there you have the defense which the Stanfords will use for the Notre Dame offense. It doesn't always work.

THE STANFORD OFFENSE.

The Stanford offense contains three basic formations. Two of them are the double wing-back formations and one a single wing-back.

Tiny Thornhill was Pop Warner's line coach when Pop, weary of getting beat by Southern California, resigned and added a postscript to his resignation saying: "We can never hope to beat Southern California with the material we have."

So what happened? Well, they made Tiny Thornhill coach. And all he has done is defeat Southern Cal in the two years he has had the job.

He replaced humanity for Pop Warner's grouching, querulous manners. He made it a game instead of something to sustain Pop Warner's reputation.

And, what was more important, he tossed away most of Pop Warner's plays which had gone off into triple reverses, spinning here and there and everywhere except toward the opponents' goal.

Tiny Thornhill kept the Warner system, and the basis of that is spinning and reversing—handling the ball—but he put in a lot of cutbacks into the line—a lot of power stuff which is usually deceptive because it evolves from a spin or reverse. It pulls the line apart to stop something wide and then the wide stuff becomes power stuff.

Tiny Thornhill has done a good job. And he has a good football team.

THE STANFORD RECORD.

Stanford played probably more consistently strong opposition this fall than did Alabama. Yet Stanford had but two touchdowns scored against her, both of them on passes.

Stanford gained an average of almost 250 yards per game. The Stanford pass attack was not so good and the defense might have been better. But they pay off at the goal line. Only two touchdowns went through or over or around the Red team.

Stanford's line is as great as the coast has seen. This is going to be a football game here on next Tuesday afternoon.

Dutra, winner of the recent Miami Biltmore open, received 12 of the 93 votes cast. Paul Runyan, the PGA champion, placed second in the poll, trailing the Californian by one ballot.

Tied at third bracketing with 10 votes each, were Tommy Armour, Gene Sarazen and Ky Laffoon. Others who received votes, in order, were MacDonald Smith, Horton Smith, Craig Wood, Willie MacFarlane and Bobby Cruickshank.

'MONK' SIMONS JOINS GREENIES IN BRISK DRILL

Coach Cox Works on Tulane Defense; Owls Are Busy.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Anticipating a dazzling display of tricky football when Tulane meets Temple here New Year's Day in the inaugural Sugar Bowl game, Coach Ted Cox today put his Big Green squad through a stiff defensive drill, while 90 miles north at Baton Rouge "Pop" Warner continued work on the Owls' offense.

Tulane, with its star back, "Little Monk" Simons, working actively for the first time since the L. S. U. game in which he suffered a shoulder injury, scampered through a two-hour workout this morning, while the Warner squad worked during the afternoon at State field.

IN FINE SHAPE.

Simons cavorted in such a manner as to indicate he will be fit as a riddle New Year's Day, and his appearance lent spirit to the entire team.

Cox outlined heavy work for Wednesday and Thursday, with the tapering-off process scheduled to start Friday.

At Baton Rouge the Owls worked hard on offensive formations, indicating Warner will give little time to defensive work. He long has been an exponent of the theory that a great attack is the best defense.

While the Owls worked behind closed gates, word circulated that Temple's attack will not be launched entirely from double wingback formations. While it is expected that the famous double wingback will form the basis for most of the Temple offensive plans, the "old fox" was reported to be schooling his backs in semi-punt and single wingback formations.

HONORED BY "BIFF."

Before the Christmas practice session the Owls were treated to a breakfast party by Captain Laurence "Biff" Jones, Tiger coach, and L. S. U. officials. Every member of the squad received presents, many sent from their homes in the east.

"Pop" is taking full advantage of the warm weather by working his squad hard in practice, and has ordered light cotton jerseys to replace the double shirts the team wore in the east.

WESTERN STARS GO FOR PASSES

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Many forward passes were tossed today by the all-star aggregation of western football players preparing for the annual New Year's Day charity football game with outstanding eastern gridsters.

The eastern squad headed by "Little Andy" Kerr and Dick Hanley, were sent through a scrimmage against the Cardinal Athletic Club of Oakland, which was designed to test the linemen and give the coaches some indications as to their starting forwards.

Coach Orin Hollingsbery, who with Percy Locey directs the westerners, ventured the opinion the west line could take everything the boys from the other side of the Mississippi had to offer, but he was a bit skeptical about the lighter backfield being able to withstand punishment.

"Warburton, Hilliard and Berry all weigh under 170 pounds," the Washington State mentor said, "and Salatino is no heavyweight. Our line will be husky enough, but it will have to carry an extra load to make up for the lack of poundage among some of the ball carriers. We're not 'Alibi Ikes,' however. You watch the west go!"

Kerr, confined to his bed in a hotel here since Sunday with a bronchial cold, has been conferring frequently with Hanley, but so far they've decided only on their backfield. They plan to start Miller Munjas, of Pittsburgh, at quarter; Francis (Pug) Lund, of Minnesota, at left half; Duane Purvis, of Purdue, at right half, and "Izzy" Weinstock, of Pitt, at full.

Mrs. Kerr said her husband would be unable to attend the east team's Christmas party in Berkeley tonight, but he would be returning to active work tomorrow.

The westerners, feeling the need for heavy work, will go through two workouts tomorrow and probably will have only one daily from then on. Unless changes are made, the east eleven will don its cleats only once each day.

Scott High Beats Miami Stingarees

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Uncorking a brilliant running and passing attack that left its opposition bewildered, Scott High school, of North Braddock, trounced the Miami Stingarees, 26 to 13, in a Christmas Day intersectional gridiron contest here today.

Both teams entered the game with unblemished records—each an outstanding aggregation in its respective section, approximately 10,000 spectators witnessed the classic under a warm, tropical sun.

Starting off with a 61-yard run by Gross, left halfback, which was good for a touchdown early in the game, Scott crossed the Miami goal line once in the first period, twice in the second and once again in the final quarter. The Stingarees, who were slightly outweighed by the Pennsylvanians, collected one touchdown in the opening period and then were held scoreless until the final quarter when they chalked up their other tally on an 80-yard run by Ellenburg, left half, after he received a triple lateral pass.

Young Will Miss Seeing Bowl Game

DEL RIO, Texas, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Bill Young, University of Alabama football player who is here recovering from an emergency appendicitis operation, has abandoned hope of seeing his Crimson Tide mates battle Stanford in the Rose Bowl game January 1.

Young had insisted after Saturday's operation that he must be taken to Pasadena in time for the game.

From his hospital bed today, Young said that Alabama would win by three touchdowns.

Mrs. W. A. Young, his mother, was expected to arrive tonight.

By Jack Troy.

Still treading deep water, Oglethorpe's basketball team will plunge into competition with the Y. M. C. A. Triangles tonight at Chamblee, in the Stormy Petrels' first home game.

Coach Jack Overton, taking his material from the intramural ranks, has sent the Petrels into the fiercest sort of competition to date. It is a method that Overton calculates will bring needed experience by the shortest route.

Going on the theory that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points, the Oglethorpe club is dodging none of the tough teams in their early schedule.

STRONG CLUB.

Ed Copeland, rangy center, is the offensive leader and one of the best shots in the city. He is aided by Sullivan and Johnson, forwards, and Moon and Fisher, guards.

The "Y" lineup includes Wills and Phillips, forwards; McDonald, center, and Tate and Virlyn Moore, guards.

To date Oglethorpe has won over Cumberland and lost to Kentucky and Georgia. The club has shown improvement in every game.

The defense is getting stouter and when the players find themselves and begin passing with more accuracy, Overton thinks the club will go places.

RECOMMENDED.

Tonight's game begins at 8 o'clock and is recommended to the general basketball public.

The Triangles opened their home schedule with a narrow victory over South Georgia State Teachers last Saturday night.

It may be a case of throwing the Stormy Petrels to the Christians—or rather the Young Men's Christian Association—and then, on the other hand, the Oglethorpes may be ready to dispute any such idea.

RYDER MATCHES IN SEPTEMBER

By Bob Cavagnaro.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Apparently yielding to the wishes of the British, George R. Jacobus, president of the Professional Golfers' Association of America, announced today that the 1935 Ryder cup matches would be played at the Ridgewood, N. J., Country Club on September 28 and 29.

Several months ago the British Association requested that the international matches for the trophy donated by Samuel Ryder be held in the fall but at the time Jacobus insisted upon a date close to the American open championship which will be held in Pittsburgh the first week in June.

Jacobus' motive was to have the members of the British team in this country in time for the national open in order to give the United States Golf Association tournament a strong international flavor.

The Britons dissented because having to play here at that time would call for a swif trip back to England for the British open, which annually is held in June, and would preclude them from having an opportunity to get in practice for their championship.

The September dates, it may develop, may not be attractive as far as the important matter of gate money is concerned. September 28 and 29, a Saturday and Sunday, may find competition from other quarters, what with the major league baseball seasons closing, the World Series looming, and the 1935 football season opening.

At that time of the year, too, weather conditions are not always favorable for golf and it was because of the uncertainty of the atmospheric elements that the U. S. G. A. moved up the 1935 women's championship tournament to August instead of early October, when it was played this year.

"We're the hosts this time," said Jacobus, "and we believe in trying to oblige our guests. They wanted to hold the matches in the fall."

The Ryder cup is in possession of the British, captured two years ago in England by virtue of six matches won, five lost and one tied.

BROUILLARD WINS.

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Lou Brouillard, ex-welter and middleweight champion, Worcester, Mass., scored a technical knockout over Sammy Slaughter, Terre Haute, Ind., negro in the fourth round of their scheduled 12-round battle today. The fight was stopped after 2:16 of the fourth by the referee when one of Slaughter's eyes was cut. Brouillard weighed 158, Slaughter 165.

SEVERAL DEALS HANGING FIRE IN BIG LEAGUES

Reds Start Flurry of Changes With Deal for Mize.

By Eddie Brietz.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—A half dozen major league baseball deals are on the fire and some of them may be announced soon after the new year.

Failing to do much business at the New York meetings, the managers are scurrying around trying to plug up weak spots before hiking south for spring training.

The Cincinnati Reds started the anticipated flurry by paying the St. Louis Cardinals $55,000 for Johnny Mize, a colt first sacker who labored last season as one of the Cardinals' farm hands at Rochester, N. Y.

Incidentally, when Powel Crosley Jr., Cincinnati millionaire, signed the check for Mize, he sent the total he has sunk in the Reds in less than a year past the $300,000 figure.

NEEDS A PITCHER.

Charlie Grimm, with the Wrigley millions behind him, is looking for at least one high-grade starting pitcher for the Chicago Cubs, and the sky is the limit if he can land the man he wants.

Harold (Pie) Traynor, manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates, also needs reinforcements, particularly behind the plate. Traynor went to the New York meetings in quest of new talent but so dull were the proceedings that he went home with nothing to show except Jack Salveson, a relief hurler, obtained in a player-trade from the New York Giants with Leo Chagnon.

The Pirates want Al Todd, young Philly catcher, and may land him if they can buy or trade for a right-hand hitting outfielder. The Phillies want Lloyd Waner or Earl Grace, another catcher, for Todd. Traynor can't make this deal until he replaces Waner.

Hal Lee, of the Boston Braves, would suit Pittsburgh, but Bill McKechnie isn't interested in cash. He has only about 23 players on his roster and if he is to part with any of his first stringers he wants talent, not cash, in return.

Over in the American league there is plenty of activity via mail and telegraph.

RED SOX NEED AID.

The Boston Red Sox are interested in infielders and pitchers. They want a first sacker, a second baseman and a top-flight moundsman.

The Washington Senators need pitching talent and Clark Griffith is looking around for a spot where he can spend some of the sizeable fortune he received for Shortstop Joe Cronin.

Bucky Harris, the Senators' new manager, is keen on Bump Hadley, who hurled for the Browns at one time and right now Griffith is trying to induce the Browns to part with Hadley. He is having no luck since Roger Hornsby isn't willing to sell the flinger, but wants playing talent.

Cleveland is pretty well set, but could use a utility infielder. The White Sox are looking for men for all positions. Mickey Cochrane would like a hard-hitting outfielder but can't locate the man he feels will fit into the Detroit picture.

Charlestown Plans June Race Meet

CHARLESTOWN, W. Va., Dec. 25.—(AP)—The race meeting ending here today was so satisfactory to its sponsors that the Charlestown Jockey Club announced another would be held in June.

A. J. Boyle, president of the club, said the spring meeting probably would begin June 1.

Approximately 5,000 fans wagered upward of $50,000 on the eight races of the closing day of the winter meeting.

The mutuel handle averaged $33,022 daily.

The last day saw few big upsets such as marked several days of the sport at this track.

Simple Singer, T. Fowler up, ran with the pack until the half-way mark and had no trouble making the bid over Granite Prince and Dutiful in the 6 1-2 furlong Christmas Day purse feature. Granite Prince took the place.

Jockey Fowler came back for his second win of the day when he booted Tristrap across the wire the winner in the mile and an eighth seventh race.

Trainer A. H. Utterback was ruled off on a charge of stimulating Mazyniata in the first race December 21. His was the fifth suspension of the meeting.

Rulers of Wave Enjoy Beach

When Eleanor Holm Jarrett, 1932 Olympic backstroke champion, arrived in Coral Gables, Fla., to compete in the national Olympic stars' aquatic meet, December 30 to January 1, Pete Des Jardins, former Olympic diving champion, welcomed her at the beach.

THE SPORT PARADE

The Pictorial Career of John Joseph McGraw

There was a 16-year-old kid in Olean, N. Y., who had the dream of 10,000 other kids—that of being a big league ball player. His name was John J. McGraw. Small and alender, but always a hustler and a fighter, a good hitter and a star third baseman, he was also the smartest kid ball player that section had ever known. You see him here as he looked in his kid days, just starting out on what proved to be one of baseball's greatest journeys. Only a short while after this, young McGraw joined the Baltimore Orioles, one of the star teams of all time. (Acme photo.) Copyright, 1934, by Grantland Rice.

First Title Since '27 Won by Paul Waner

Official Figures Give Pirate Fielder .362, Eight Points Above Bill Terry.

By Hugh S. Fullerton Jr.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Paul Waner's feat in coming back to win the National league batting championship seven years after taking his first title received the official stamp of approval today when the revised and rechecked batting figures for the senior baseball circuit were made public.

The Pittsburgh right fielder led his field by eight percentage points with an official mark of .362 against the mark of .354 for Bill Terry, New York Giants manager, who won runner-up honors. In 1927, when he led the league at bat and was adjudged its most valuable player, the elder Waner hit .380.

In addition to compiling the best average, Waner collected the greatest number of base hits, 217 in 599 at bats and scored 122 runs. Terry was the only other player to make more than 200 hits. He had 213. Melvin Ott, of the Giants, co-holder of the season's home run honors, was second in scoring with 119 runs. Terry led in singles with 169.

TIE FOR HOMERS.

Ott and Jim (Ripper) Collins, of the Champion St. Louis Cardinals, each hit 35 circuit blows to tie for the crown held in 1933 by Chuck Klein. Collins also led in another respect with a total of 369 bases on his 200 hits.

Other leaders among the 240 players who took part in last season's National league games were: Jack Rothrock, St. Louis, 647 times at bat; Hazen (Kiki) Cuyler, Chicago, and Ethan Allen, Philadelphia, 42 doubles each; Joe Medwick, St. Louis, 18 triples; Hughey Critz, New York, 22 sacrifices, and John L. (Pepper) Martin, St. Louis, 23 stolen bases. Martin was the only repeating leader from 1933.

Although Collins was their only representative among the first 10 batting aces, the Cardinals took team honors with a .288 average, leading Pittsburgh by one point. The Cards led in times at bat, runs, hits, two baggers, total bases and base thefts.

BOSTON WEAK.

Only Boston failed to get representation on the individual first 10 batters which was composed of Waner .362, Terry .354, Cuyler, .338, Collins, .333, Floyd (Arky) Vaughan, Pittsburgh, .333, Sam Leslie, Brooklyn, .332, Joe Moore, New York, .331, Ethan Allen, Philadelphia, .3304, John Moore, Cincinnati and Philadelphia, .330, and Harlan Pool, Cincinnati, .327. Of this group Cuyler and Allen are right handed hitters and Collins bats from either side of the plate. The others all are left handers.

Two minor records were broken and one tied during the season while Gus Shur, Pittsburgh first baseman, who was one of five players to go through the season without relief, built up the makings of a good iron man streak. The 154 games brought his string, which began in 1931, to 475 without interruption.

Bill Urbanski, of Boston, who had four walks and two sacrifices in a game June 13 for no official times at bat, tied one mark. Ott established a modern league record by scoring six runs against the Phillies August 4 while the Giants at a club established a new low mark for base stealing by pilfering only 19 in 153 games.

ARCADIA WON BY HIGH GLEE

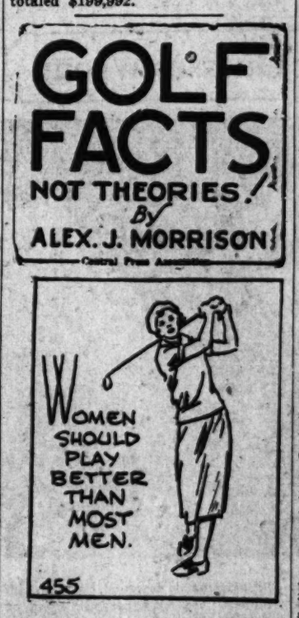

ARCADIA, Cal., Dec. 25.—(AP)—High Glee, C. V. Whitney's brown filly, won the Christmas Day stakes of $5,000 added money in the inaugural of the Santa Anita winter running before 50,000 persons today.

Second, two lengths behind, was Chictoney, who had led from the starting gate into the stretch. Riskulus was third, a length and a half ahead of Top Row.

The time was 1 minute 37 seconds for the mile.

The winner, daughter of Pharamond II, out of Beaming, paid $14.60 to win, $6.60 to place, and $4.40 to show. Chictoney was worth $39 to place and $13.40 to show. Riskulus paid $4.60 to show.

The pari-mutuel take for the event was $53,000. For six races the take totaled $199,992.

I overheard an argument the other day which struck me as having some logic. One fellow claimed that the woman who has a nurse to care for the children, a maid to do the housework and such other help as needed to run the home should become a golf champion in no time.

He pointed out that she could devote the whole day and practically every day in the week to taking lessons and practicing.

I know of many women who have nothing to think about but golf, yet they don't become even good players. The average man, even though he may find time to get to the golf course has enough worries of one sort or the other to keep him from concentrating to any great extent on golf alone.

I'm inclined to think that women, outside of long hitting, should beat the men.

BACKS DRILLED IN AIR ATTACK; LINE SKIRMISHES

Team Coming Around Fine Despite Injuries to Main Men.

By Ralph McGill.

ROSE BOWL FIELD, PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 25.—This was Christmas Day to some folks, but it was just December 25 to the Alabama football team as they went through a workout on the very field where, on January 1, they will meet the Stanfords in the greatest football game of the year. Santa Claus does not arrive for Alabama until tonight.

It was a very strenuous workout and an entirely private one, only the visiting newspapermen being allowed to go through the gates and place the nude eye on the workout. There was no scrimmage, except by the linemen. They perspired and grunted and worked as hard as ever while the backs were busied with passes and catching same.

Alabama coaches are frankly concerned over first-hand reports from the Stanford eleven, although they still believe the team will come through with a victory if it plays up for form.

'BAMA CRIPPLES.

The team is coming around, although with Bill Young out with appendicitis and with Joe Riley and Jimmy Angelich both crippled, the Stanfords will have a decided edge in reserve material. Still they would have that even though all Alabama's men were in first-class condition.

The Alabama team's speed continues to be impressive. The team is in good mental condition. It believes in itself.

Fans on hand for a pre-view yesterday commented on the accurate kicking and passing of the southerners.

The Stanford and Alabama lines should scale just about even when the first tussle occurs next Tuesday. This will be a new experience for the Palo Alto boys, for in most of their games this year they had an edge in the forward wall.

Alabama worked out with Hutson and Bryant, at ends; Lee and Baswell, tackles; Morrow and Marr, guards; Francis, center; Smith, quarter; Howell and Angelisch, halfbacks; Demyanovich, fullback. Jim Whatley, tackle, who was threatened with appendicitis on the trip to the coast, continued to take it easy but was expected to be ready for hard work in a few days.

COAST BALLYHOO.

Meanwhile, the ballyhoo is on for Stanford. All coast papers today acclaimed the Stanfords as the best coast team in the past ten years. You may put this down as strictly baloney and sliced quite thin, that. The Stanfords cannot be as good as the Trojans of 1931 and 1932. They don't come that good more than once in a very great while.

Some of the Stanford team was due in this afternoon but the majority, including the great Bobby Grayson, whom I figure to be not quite as good as Dixie Howell, will not arrive until Thursday morning.

All critics picking Stanford to win now say that with Grayson in shape Stanford is a copper-riveted cinch to win, but with him out, the game is still even.

Boys, the ozone out here does things. It creates delusions and illusions of grandeur.

Stanford Coach Eases Up on Work.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal., Dec. 25.—(AP)—His squad back in shape after a series of illness and injuries, Coach C. E. "Tiny" Thornhill today announced the end of heavy scrimmaging for his Stanford football players who are preparing for the Pasadena Rose Bowl game.

Only Bobby Grayson, the All-America back and Stanford's best signal caller, remained on the slightly doubtful list as the squad drew a day of rest in celebration of Christmas—and Grayson confidently expects to be ready to meet Alabama's great Crimson Tide one week hence.

Except for Jim "Monk" Moscrip, stellar left end, and Robert "Horse" Reynolds, All-America tackle, the practice field was empty today. The pair spent over an hour exercising.

Thornhill will collect his squad—that is, those who haven't left for the south already—for a final informal workout here tomorrow afternoon. The team leaves at 9 p. m. for Pasadena, and will have two workouts at Brookside Park there Thursday.

The ankle injury to Larry Rouble, regular right guard, responded to treatment so fast that he was released from the hospital here this morning after having been a patient overnight.

Bucknell Gridders Resume Work Today

LEWISBURG, Pa., Dec. 25.—(AP) Bucknell University's football players will reassemble tomorrow for another short practice in preparation for the Orange Bowl game with the University of Miami in Miami on New Year's Day.

The home field was covered with snow and coaches expected this would prevent much progress in tomorrow's workout, the first after a three-day Christmas vacation. The players will leave by train for Miami after the practice session. They are scheduled to arrive in the Florida city Friday morning.

FALSE REPORT.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Dec. 24.—(UP) Lee-Carl Overstreet, chairman of the University of Missouri committee on intercollegiate athletics, said tonight in connection with rumors Don Faurot had been chosen as head football coach to succeed Frank Carideo, that no such action had been taken by the university.

Tide Will Know Its Oats This Time

PASADENA, Dec. 25.—The Alabama team will know its oats on January 1. The Rose Bowl is sewed in winter oats instead of turf. The tender oats are clipped short and make an ideal turf. It does not last for long but then the big game is the only one played in the Bowl and they can get this turf ready within two weeks.

Miss Dean Smith and Miss Laura Troutman made their formal debut at a brilliant reception given by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Y. Smith, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Troutman, at their homes on The Prado in Ansley Park on Christmas afternoon. Both homes were opened for this auspicious occasion, the lower floors of the homes being elaborately decorated, the Yuletide motif featuring the lovely decorations. Easter lilies and poinsettias predominated in the decorations prevailing in the dining room of the Troutman home, the long table being overlaid with a filet lace cloth. A large silver basket filled with poinsettias and Easter lilies graced the center of the table. At either end of the table were silver candelabra holding red tapers. On the buffets were antique silver pewter filled with Christmas greens.

The dining room of Mr. and Mrs. Smith's home was adorned with baskets and vases of red roses and white bouvardia. The central decoration of the lace-covered table was a silver basket of crimson roses and white bouvardia. The bodice introduced the V-neckline, and the sleeves were opened at the shoulder, fitting tightly from the elbows to the wrists, ending in a point over the bride's shapely hands. The skirt was molded to her slender figure, and flared at the knees to form a graceful train.

Her veil, the treasured possession of Mrs. Harry Stearns, was of imported Venetian lace, the cap effect being bordered with sprays of ivory colored orange blossoms which ended in a cluster over either ear, clusters of orange blossoms being featured on the entire length of the veil. Debutantes and Visitors Feted At Driving Club Dinner-Dance

Debutantes shared honors with visitors at the Christmas dinner-dance given at the Piedmont Driving Club on Tuesday evening, and several hundred socially prominent Atlantans dined and danced amid the colorful decorations suggestive of the festive season of the year. Garlands of smilax were suspended from the center of the ballroom, and radiated to the massive white columns, which were entwined with smilax and topped with silver bells and red poinsettias.

Lillian Mae Pattern

COMFORTABLE TO WORK IN, SLIMMING, TOO!
Pattern 2096.

When it comes to frocks for the house, the dress that's smart is the dress that flatters and is comfortable to work in. This design, for instance, is tailored especially for the more mature figure with slenderizing panels that run all the way from the hem to the neckline, back and front. And it's certainly comfortable—just notice those trim slot pleats that give roominess through the bodice—to say nothing of the inverted pleats in the skirt. The pretty shoulder frills add a nice little feminine touch round the neck, but, if you prefer, they may be omitted and the dress made with a simple square neckline. Long sleeves are included in the pattern.

Pattern 2096 is available in sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 takes 4 1-2 yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Mr., Mrs. Calhoun Are Hosts at Party

Among outstanding social events of Christmas Day was the aperitif party at which Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Calhoun were hosts at their home on Pace's Ferry road, assembling a group of married members of society. Miss Louise Calhoun, debutante daughter of the hosts, assisted in entertaining.

The lower floor of the handsome home was decorated with quantities of Christmas foliage. A silver Christmas tree in the dining room was silhouetted against the background of holly. Garlands of ivy and stately Easter lilies in the drawing room, were offset by a large wreath, made entirely of silver leaves, and ornamented at the bottom with a spray of blue and silver balls, tied with blue ribbon.

Poinsettia blossoms and foliage plants added a colorful note to the library and stately palms and ferns graced the sunroom. Mrs. Calhoun was gowned in black crepe threaded with gold, and her flowers were orchids.

Misses Estes, Murray Keep Open House For Popular Belles

Among the interesting affairs featuring the social calendar for Christmas day was the "open house" at which Misses Bootsie Estes and Katherine Murray were hostesses at the home of Miss Estes' parents, Dr. and Mrs. H. Grady Estes, on Lullwater road. The party, which assembled several hundred members of the college contingent, was a complimentary gesture to Miss Mary Warthen, of Warthen, who is the attractive guest of Miss Estes, and Miss Virginia Murray, sister of Miss Katherine Murray, who has returned from Sullins College in Bristol, Va., to spend the holidays in Atlanta.

The interior of the home presented a scene of Yuletide beauty with its gay decorations of numerous lighted Christmas trees, myriads of poinsettias, holly wreaths and mistletoe. Hundreds of crimson candles, burning amid the Christmas foliage, added to the attractiveness of the scene. Holly wreaths, centered with lights, hung at the windows and doors of the hospitable home.

Standing before an arrangement of Christmas foliage, starred with poinsettias, Miss Estes and Miss Murray and the honor guests received the callers. They were asissted by Miss Estes' mother, Mrs. H. Grady Estes, Miss Marjorie Gould and Miss Ruth Brannen.

Tea was served in the dining room from an exquisitely appointed table, which was covered with an imported lace cover and centered with a crystal centerpiece filled with red roses, narcissi, and silver foliage. Tall flanking the central decoration were crystal candlesticks holding tall red tapers.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Honor Debutantes At Buffet Supper

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lyle were hosts at a buffet supper Wednesday evening at their home on Brookhaven drive, the lovely affair complimenting Miss Mary Irby, popular debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Irby, and Miss Maude Thompson, attractive debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Thompson. The supper, which assembled a group of the debutante contingent of society and an equal number of young men, preceded the brilliant supper-dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell and Mr. and Mrs. William J. Weinman at the Piedmont Driving Club, presenting to society their debutante daughters, Miss Mary Ann Carr and Miss Frances Weinman.

Colorful Christmas decorations were attractively arranged throughout the lower floor of the home, with myriads of crimson candles burning among masses of holly, mistletoe, poinsettias, and red roses. The beautifully appointed table in the dining room was centered with a silver Christmas tree, and placed at intervals were antique silver epergne filled with brilliantly tinted fruits. Antique silver cake plates held cakes and bonbons adorned with the Christmas symbols.

Assisting Mrs. Lyle in receiving and entertaining the guests were Mesdames Alton Irby, Gordon Burnett, Charles Dannals, and Harry B. Thompson.

Miss Russell Becomes Bride of Mr. Butler At Church Ceremony

The church was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns and foliage plants. The altar was banked on either side with palms interspersed with seven-branch cathedral candelabra and floor baskets filled with Easter lilies and calla lilies. On each side of the cross on the altar were seven-branch candelabra and brass vases filled with Easter and calla lilies. Garlands of asparagus ferns graced the front of the altar. On alternating pews were placed tall cathedral candles, the bases of which were entwined with asparagus ferns.

A program of nuptial music was rendered by Mrs. Gertrude S. Wall consisting of Traumerie, "I Love You Truly," and "Evening Star," from Tannhauser, "Liebestraum" was softly played during the ceremony. The bridal party entered the church to the strains of the "Wedding March" from Lohengrin. Entering first were the ushers, Dr. Clyde Harling, of Atlanta, and John C. Calhoun, of Rochester, Minn. Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was used for the recessional.

Miss Frances Snipes acted as the maid of honor and was the only attendant. She was becomingly gowned in a model of aquamarine crepe made in a two-piece effect with a collar which formed graceful folds at the neck. Her hat was an off-the-face model of brown taffeta and her other accessories were of brown. She carried an arm bouquet of pink bouvardia and Johanna Hill roses, tied with eggshell satin ribbon.

The bride entered with her father, Fred John Russell, by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his best man, William Mathews. THE SPORTLIGHT

A BUSY CHRISTMAS.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 25.—There was a time when Christmas Day was supposed to consist of resting under the holly and mistletoe around the old yule log.

Here in Los Angeles you have your choice between going to the big Santa Anita race track opening, with its 60,000 crowd, or watching Alabama take another workout for the coming Rose Bowl game.

The spirit of sport has overshadowed the spirit of Christmas, although the spirit of Christmas is working overtime. So is sport.

Alabama's arrival on Christmas Eve handed the debaters a new impetus. The combined size and speed of the Crimson Tide made a distinct impression on those who have felt fairly certain this is Stanford's year. They haven't quit on Stanford, but they are not so certain.

They are quite willing in this section to back their opinions with fairly important cash, but many of the larger wagerers are holding back until Stanford's arrival Wednesday. For that matter, it will still be a guessing match when the first whistle blows in the wake of the Rose Bowl flower parade next week.

The Crimson Tide Arrives.

Alabama's Crimson Tide came roaring in with a rush and a sweep yesterday, accompanied by 250 camp followers from the deep south.

Big and active looking in its first work out under a steaming sun, Alabama made an immediate hit with the coaches and other inspectors who watched a long, fast drill.

It was the combined size and speed of the invading southerners that caught the attention of Howard Jones and Bill Spalding, as well as 2,000 others who were busy picking out Captain Lee, the 225-pound tackle; Dixie Howell, kicker, passer and ball carrier; Don Hutson, the tall, fast end, and several others who caught the eye with their look of football skill.

This Alabama team, on arrival, proved to be big, fast and ready for action.

"I am making no prediction," Coach Frank Thomas remarked in the course of the first Pasadena practice, "but outside of one or two ailing members the team will be ready to go at top speed. This is the type of team, mentally and physically, the warms a coach's heart. As far as I can tell it has everything a good football team needs."

The keen spirit of the Dixie squad and its evident love of football was another factor that no one could overlook.

Howell, Hutson and others completed 20 out of 21 forward passes thrown in practice, proving the accuracy of the passers and the skill of the receivers in the immediate wake of a long train ride.

From now on Alabama will continue its daily drill up to New Year's Eve, and there will be no soft spots or easy going moments en route to the first kick off.

DOWN the ALLEYS

The Ladies' Commercial Duckpin league is enjoying one of the best competitive seasons since the organization of this group of eight teams of young ladies.

Atlanta Paper Company holds the lead, in the team standings. Model Laundry, Downtown Chevrolet, Blick's Howling Center are real contenders for the title. The Southern Railway team, a new group of bowlers, is beginning to show real signs of going places. Belle Isle Garage, Atlanta Journal and Pinson Tire round out the other teams in this loop.

Another "preliminary" sweep stakes will be bowled Thursday evening, whereby another Atlanta bowler will be assured of a paid-up $50 entry to participate in the United States duckpin sweepstakes. Four Atlanta stars are already entered and it is expected that the five bowlers will give local "stock" in the big tourney good representation.

Members of the Gulf Refining Company Duckpin league are enjoying more real fun and competition in their bowling matches each Wednesday than they have at any previous time.

The friendly rivalry and good fellowship to be enjoyed at the game is further enhanced by the membership of the league, of 10 teams, being composed entirely of Gulf Refining Company employes.

Two ladies' teams, Gulf Aviation and Good Gulf, are giving the eight teams of men plenty of competition.

After losing the lead of the league to the Tri-State Construction, the Fox Manufacturing Company has regained the lead by a good margin, with Frank (Powerhouse) Burns slashing the little pins unmercifully for a tremendous average. Burns has a 420 series to his credit in this league, it is the high mark for three individual games for the Capital City loop.

Enjoying the Christmas afternoon bowling in a peppy "scotch" game were Dr. H. F. Hope, Henry W. (Red) Pearce, Lucian Hope, Gus Allard, B. B. (Bumble Bee) Fuller, Henry Hope, with partners being changed each game.

The City Tenpin league bowlers will open play in the second half of their schedule, one week from tonight.

UNIFORM TEXTBOOKS FAVORED BY MARSHALL

Macon County Legislator To Seek Change in System.

By the Associated Press.

If a bill providing for free schoolbooks for Georgia school children fails to pass the next Georgia legislature, Representative-elect A. A. Marshall, of Macon (Montezuma) county, plans to introduce a bill calling for uniform system of textbooks throughout the state.

Marshall, who will be a new legislator at the 1935 session, said that he opposed the frequent change of textbooks in the various districts. Poor children, he said, could not hope to buy new books every time systems changed.

Although he expects the question of a new state constitution to be one of the leading ones in the legislative session, he is opposed to any changes. He said he considered the present constitution "freely amendable."

Four-Year Term.

He favors four-year terms for state officers, creation of the office of lieutenant governor, ratification of the order for $3 automobile license tags and diversion of $2,000,000 in highway funds for common schools and Confederate veterans' pensions.

Marshall said he thinks the legislature "should leave prohibition in effect in Georgia just as it is," but believes the people should be allowed to vote on any question if they wish.

T. W. Wrench, editor of the Charlton County Herald and representative-elect in the next legislature, said he favored a plan for the state to grant privilege of licensing beer, but "would not vote to bring whisky back to Georgia."

Mr. Wrench said he was "willing to submit the whisky question to the vote of the people, because I feel something should be done to regulate the seeming disregard for the law as it is."

He said he also favored tax exemption up to $3,000 on homes and farms, a highway patrol, "something like the Mississippi sales tax plan," a fair tax on intangible property, and home rule by the counties and cities of the state.

J. N. Parker, representative-elect from Union county, said he believed "the major question to come before the next session of the Georgia legislature will be that of the relief of our public school system."

Mr. Parker said he pledged his "wholehearted support of any program that will insure the successful operation of the public schools of Georgia."

He said he was convinced that some "definite tax reform is essential, and that certain reallocations will have to be made."

Mr. Parker, a native of Union county, where he was born September 12, 1881, says most of his life has been devoted to farming and business, and that he has been a Baptist minister since 1922.

He said he was elected on a platform calling for support generally of the program advocated by Governor Talmadge.

Saying the administration's legislative program had been approved by the people, Representative-elect George W. Camp, of Carroll county, for years prominent in educational circles, discussed three major measures which he said he would advocate in the 1935 session of the Georgia legislature.

3-Point Program.

They are: 1. Public school maintenance wholly by the state; 2. A sales tax, exempting certain necessities; 3. Revision of the present income tax law.

Camp, who is a doctor of pedagogy and a prominent figure in educational circles of the state, said he thought the state should take over entirely the support of the public schools, relieving counties and local districts, "so that local taxes may be lowered."

He said he favored a sales tax, "provided that certain exemptions are made "for necessities and farm products, and that the law makes it compulsory to pass the tax on to the purchaser.

Dr. Camp said he favored also exemption of $1,500 to $2,000 on farms, homes and other real estate from ad valorem assessments, and a revision of the income tax law to increase the rates in the upper brackets, lower the exemptions, and eliminate difficulties of its enforcement.

Toy Salesman Brings Joy To Adirondack Hamlet

STONY CREEK, N. Y., Dec. 25. (AP)—Kiddies in this little Adirondack hamlet were proudly fondling dolls today and beating on drums—their Christmas presents—made possible by jovial Sam Coplan, Brooklyn toy saleman, who for the last 26 years has been playing Santa Claus to the needy of the north country.

Forced to forego Christmas with his own family in order that the youngsters in this region might have something to make them continue believing in Santa, Sam E. Coplan was on his way back to his Brooklyn home with the knowledge that his "flock" was happy.

Nearly 30,000 toys and a large quantity of clothing and foodstuffs were emptied from his overflowing pack and distributed to youngsters by his assistants Christmas Eve.

Culbertson on Contract

An Embarrassing Choice Among Riches.

Of the many hands of the recent Vanderbilt tournament, one of the most interesting seems to have entirely escaped notice in the newspapers. The reason for this neglect is easy to see: With all four hands exposed the deal presents no problem whatsoever, even to the vereiest tyro. With the East-West hands concealed, however, the deal presents problems which were not sneezed at even by some of the experts.

Both sides vulnerable.

At one table the final contract was five clubs by South with no adverse bidding. West opened the 10 of hearts. Now what is declarer's best line of play? This question has been submitted to a number of expert players and opinion is closely divided among the various possibilities.

It is evident that declarer has two problems to face: first, how to develop 11 tricks, and second, how to take out insurance against the possible immediate loss of two diamond tricks and one other trick. The dificulty of the play arises not from a poverty of resources but on the contrary from an embarrassing choice among riches.

Declarer counts six trump tricks, two hearts and the spade ace. He must find two additional tricks somewhere. There is a possibility of winning a third heart trick if West has led away from the heart queen; of developing one or two diamond tricks; of winning an additional high card spade trick by a finesse in either direction; of winning one or more additional long spades by setting up the entire suit.

What stands in the way of developing all these resoures in order? Why shouldn't declarer accept the heart finesse at once, playing small from the dummy on the first trick? To this play there's the obvious objection that if East holds the heart queen he will on captauring the lead immediately return a diamond and force upon the declarer the very unpleasant guess in the diamond suit. All the instincts of a good player are to defer the necessity for making this guess until the last possible moment.

The same aversion for a diamond lead through the king-jack discourages any plan involving taking a spade finesse toward East.

But if the heart finesse is to be abandoned, then the declarer must win a minimum of three tricks in spades and diamonds combined. There is some prospect of establishing the spade suit by cashing the ace and leading the queen through East with the intention of discarding if East does not play the king. But the attack on dummy's hearts initiated by the opening lead promises to kill the bulk of the spade suit if the spade king is held by West. If declarer refuses the heart finesse and voluntarily gives up a trick to the spade king he will have to win a diamond in order to establish enough tricks—and there he is right back at the distasteful necessity of opening the diamond suit himself.

Let us tabulate the possible plans that may be formulated at Trick 1:

First plan: Accept the heart finesse at Trick 1 and if it loses trust to a right guess and a good break on a diamond return by East.

Second plan: Win Trick 1: cash spade ace; lead spade queen, and discard a diamond if East does not play the king; if West wins with the spade king and returns a heart, decide whether to accept the heart finesse now or to play for a second spade trick through finding the adverse spades split 3-3 and for the development of a diamond trick through a lead up to the king-jack. In this plan it probably will be best to cash the trump jack to unlock, immediately after winning Trick 1.

Third plan: Win Trick 1 in dummy and immediately lead a diamond in the hope of knocking out the ace by the finesse of the jack. This plan is not quite so wild as it seems inasmuch as declarer is in no fear of a diamond return by West should the finesse of the diamond jack lose to the queen.

Fourth plan: Win Trick 1; cash the spade ace; ruff a spade; return to dummy with the trump jack; ruff another spade—and now, if the spades break 3-3 and the trumps break no worse than 4-2, run the remaining spades and make a slam.

The question is, which plan would you adopt, and why?

A Waxlike Pomade Is Excellent To Keep Lip Stick Set Right

By MIGNON.

These little sticks of white pomade, that look like lip sticks and come in the same kind of container, are, I have discovered, good not only to keep the lips from chapping, but also to put on after using lip sticks. The pomade is a kind of waxy something that looks like a white cream lip stick, but isn't greasy. It protects the lips from the wind and is especially nice to use when going on an automobile trip or when you are golfing or hunting. The wind seems not to penetrate the waxlike substance. The sticks are small and handy to carry.

There are several good ones, and they are, of course, not at all expensive. They feel good on the lips, because, particularly in cold weather, they make them feel soft and yet not oily. I can tell you of a couple of especially good ones, I always have one on hand. On long motor trips they are practically indispensable.

The pomade, remember, is a protection against chapped lips. If you haven't used one and want to cure chapped lips in a hurry, particularly when they reach the peeling stage, I can tell you of a cream that will do the work in one night—two at the most. Then after that it is up to you to take better care of yourself and carry a stick of pomade.

If you are one of the rare women who do not use color on her lips, you still need the pomade to protect them. It can be used effectively over the rouge or without it.

Pomade will not make your lips shine—if that's what you want. Probably it is not. It rather waxes them, and is most efficient in its work, but if you want them to glisten you will have to keep dodging into the dressing room and putting on cream over your lip rouge. A wearisome task!

In Georgia's FIELDS and STREAMS

by H. A. Carter

SYNONYMY.

To the average sportsman over the nation, the name Georgia suggests quail. To the average conservationist, the word quail suggests Herbert L. Stoddard. To me, Herbert L. Stoddard suggests a number of things, most of them with a decided point.

There is in this state the most interesting laboratory of conservation that I know. It is located at Sherwood plantation, some 20 miles from Thomasville, and from it has come the most complete monograph ever written on a single species of bird, game or otherwise. Too few people in Georgia realize that this is true, giving strength to the prophet and honor proverb.

The work on which this monograph was based started in 1925, continuing in high gear until about 1930, when the monograph itself began to take more time than the work. The publication of this work was an outstanding event of 1932 in the conservation world. If any person beside Stoddard himself has a suggestion for the improvement of this monograph, he is keeping the suggestions to himself.

The habits of the quail are studied in detail and are beautifully set forth. Among habits, of course, food is included as the subject of special sections as well as exhaustive appendices. There would seem to be no necessity whatever for the quail eating anything Stoddard has not already discovered in their diets. The enemies of the quail are also well presented with especial reference to their relation to bobwhite coveys. The diseases of quail, as well as chapters on parasites, make other important contributions to the knowledge of quail ecology.

The thing that appeals most to me is the exhaustive study of quail mortality, including both the destruction of nests and of adult birds. There are definite means of telling, in almost every case, what predator was responsible for quail losses, as far as nests are concerned, since every animal treats his food in a slightly different manner from that of other animals.

Georgia as a state should be proud of this work and should know more about it. The studies continue today at Sherwood, with Ed Komarek, assuming the reins during Stoddard's trip to France next year. All that the average persons need to know can be found in "The Bobwhite Quail," published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Friendly Counsel

By CAROLINE CHATFIELD

Problems of general interest submitted by readers will be discussed in this column. Correspondence invited. Your name held in confidence. Write Miss Chatfield, care The Atlanta Constitution.

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:

I have a boy friend that I adore. He comes twice a week and sometimes oftener. But we never go anywhere. We just sit at home and talk. Sometimes I suggest a ride or a movie but he always has a ready excuse for not going. At first I thought he was crazy about talking to me and that flattered me but after a while I began to suspect that he was more interested in saving his money than he was in being entertained. If he were a poor boy I wouldn't expect him to spend any money on me, however I happen to know that he makes a good salary and he has nobody dependent on him. He hasn't proposed to me yet, though he never goes with any other girl and I think he considers that he has me sewed up. What do you think of this case? DISGUSTED.

Answer: He has all the hallmarks of a penurious, miserly man. If he won't buy gasoline to take his girl to ride, nor spend 50 cents to take her to a movie, nor propose marriage to her, what, in heaven's name, does she adore in him and what will her adoration net her? If stinginess were just a habit that one fell into without knowing it there would be every reason to excuse it. But stinginess is deeper than that. It is the expression of a spiritual meanness and littleness. It is one of the most repellant forms selfishness can assume. The man whose selfishness takes the guise of conceit may be laughable but he is not held in contempt. The man whose selfishness takes the guise of intense egotism may be considered a bore but he is not despicable. The man whose selfishness expresses itself in stinginess is an object of scorn and contempt before the world. Everybody despises a stingy man. So well known is this fact that it frequently happens people spend more than they can afford for fear of being thought stingy.

Dickens' Scrooge, the old miser best known among the misers of novels, remains the most contemptible character he ever created. Now it's one thing for a girl to find herself married to a man whose stinginess she had not guessed and quite another for her to find herself merely in love with a man whose stinginess she has sampled. It often happens that a man is able to conceal from his fiancee traits that he knows would discount him with her. This is a course dictated by selfishness also. But when a young man thinks so much of his money that he will expose himself and run the risk of losing his girl rather than spend a little money to make her think better of him, when he is so sunk in stinginess, it augurs badly for the future.

Every woman that gets married has to put up with something that is not ideal, just as the man finds it impossible to pick a perfect wife. To some women stinginess would be the most odious trait a man might have while another might consider it a minor defect of character. The thing to do is to face this rimple fact that the man is stingy, that he will be increasingly stingy as he grows older and that any effort to change him will only irritate, and never under any circumstances, change him. For, be it said again: Stinginess is not a habit superimposed on one's character. Stinginess is an expression of one's inner nature and that inner nature, like the quality of the skin itself, cannot be changed.

But you should be warned that it is one thing to adore a beau that is stingy and another to adore a husband who is stingy. At present you are not dependent upon him for the pleasures that he won't provide. If he doesn't take you to a movie another boy will. If you don't ride in his car you may ride in your own or your father's car. But remember that after marriage you will probably have a common purse whose strings he ties and a common car the gasoline for which he buys. If he denies you these, and a thousand other little diversions that cost money, you can't then view the matter with indulgence or indifference. Most likely you would come to despise him for the meanness that he will certainly manifest, once he gets you safely under his roof.

THE RUSTLE OF TAFFETA FOR HOLIDAYS.

It's time to be considering one of the picturesque formal dresses with drop-shoulderline and deep decolletage back.

It's exquisitely lovely too, carried out in black or sapphire blue transparent velvet with the collar of self-fabric or of silver lame.

Today's pattern serves more than one purpose. It may also be made in street length with high neck at the back, as seen in small back view. It looks very smart in black, rust, green, plum, etc., crepe silk.

Style No. 694 is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15 and 17 years. Size 15 requires 4 1-8 yards of 39-inch material.

PATTERN 5276

DRAW UP YOUR HOME IN FILET CROCHET.
Pattern 5276.

Filet crochet can indeed dress up your home, if you use this lovely design that is available only in this Alice Brooks pattern. The tulip motifs, set off by a lace stitch, are enhanced by the lattice-like design of the center of the pieces. You can also use the designs for scarfs and other sized doilies; the directions tell you how to do this. Of course, this set is made in the popular string that looks so rich and wears so well. If you want smaller doilies you can use a finer thread and the result will be a very dainty bit of filet crochet.

In pattern 5276 you will find exact instructions and charts for making the set shown as well as for making scarfs and other sized doilies; material requirements; illustrations of the set and of all stitches needed.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents to Household Arts Department, The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

GANNA WALSKA SINGER LANDS IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Barely in time for Christmas, Ganna Walska, singer, arrived from Paris today on the Ile de France.

The liner was delayed 18 hours by heavy gales, and only passengers who live in the metropolitan area were able to reach their homes for Christmas dinner.

WREATH IS PLACED ON DILLINGER GRAVE

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Some one remembered the late John Dillinger, slain gangster leader, on this Christmas Day.

A wreath, bearing a card on which was written: "To my pal," was found on the gangster's grave in Crown Hill cemetery this morning.

At ATLANTA'S THEATERS

Dick Powell Is Star In Feature at Fox

In another story of the "poor little rich girl" surfeited with the artificialities of her luxurious circumstances who seeks and finds happiness in the form of a window washer, Bob Lane, otherwise known as Dick Powell, the star of "Happiness Ahead" is now playing at the Fox theater.

The girl, Josephine Hutchinson as Joan Bradford, who, incidentally, fills her role rather capably, leaves a ritzy New Year's Eve party given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bradford (John Halliday and Marjorie Gateson), and wanders out into the gay frolicsome mass seething along Broadway. Well, she ends up in a chop suey palace and has just a dandy good time after the leading man stages a rather bashful but nevertheless effective "pick-up."

Of course, she can't reveal her true identity, or the poor but honest young window washer might—well, you know how these p. b. h. young men are—so a number of amusing misunderstandings ensue that all but wreck her new-found happiness. Although not actually shown on the screen, I seriously suspect that Jelliffe Travis, the suave yet banal gentleman chosen by Joan's mother to marry her, was metaphorically left waiting at the altar.

Completing the bill is a Movietone newsreel, an animated cartoon short of Popeye, and a Grantland Rice Sportlight. —W. W. B.

Joe Penner, Jack Oakie Star "College Rhythm"

"College Ryhthm" the tuneful and merry melange of fun and music which greeted Christmas Day theatergoers at the Paramount Tuesday, is a triple-threat picture. Joe Penner, the duck salesman of radio, in his initial feature film appearance, should appeal to Penner fans. Jack Oakie plays a typical Oakie role in accordance with the demands of his public. And Lanny Ross, who needs no introduction to either radio or cinema audiences, adds to his screen achievements.

The male contingent, which provides ample comedy amusement as well as some fine singing by Ross, is aided and materially abetted by winsome Helen Mack, pretty Mary Brian and entertaining Lydie Roberti.

There's an Atlanta angle, or perhaps, better, several Atlanta curves in the picture, provided by the appearance among the All-American co-eds of Margot Sage and Virginia Dabney, two former Atlanta girls seeking fame and fortune via the dance route in movieland.

Audiences will leave the Paramount during the run of "College Rhythm" whistling or humming the musical scores. They won't remember for long the story of the picture, but will frequently recall some of the comedy high spots and particularly those provided by the new and ideally matched team of Penner and Oakie.

The usual newsreel and short subjects round up an enjoyable bill.

Joe E. Brown Amusing As 6-Day Bicycle Racer

Joe E. Brown is the feature attraction at the Georgia theater, reopened after seven months. The Georgia closed its doors on June 1 and was reopened Christmas Day.

This time Joe E. Brown appears as a "Six-Day Bike Rider" in the First National picture of that title. As a bicycle rider Joe is a regular fiend, but he wins the race and his girl by the most novel and hilarious fluke imaginable.

Joe starts out as the village cut-up who goes to the big city to show his girl, who has jilted him, and the rest of the neighbors what a great guy he is. After getting into a terrific battle, landing in jail and being bailed out, he makes a mad rush for the races, which have already started.

The race is the big climax to one of the most uproarious comedies in which the wide-mouthed comedian has yet appeared. It is not only filled with riotous situations but is crammed with breath-taking thrills. An exceptionally fine cast of players have the important roles in support of Joe. Maxine Doyle has the leading feminine role. She is a comparative newcomer to the screen, but an actress of exceptional beauty and talent. Funnyman Frank McHugh plays the role of Joe's pal and teammate, while Gordon Wescott is the "city slicker" who tries to steal Joe's girl.

The Georgia, reopened by Lucas & Jenkins, played to large audiences all day Christmas and the management expressed itself as being well pleased with the public's response. Laurel and Hardy appear in a full-length feature in the Georgia's offering next week. R. O'K.

Physician Questioned In Death of Girl, 19

PORT JEFFERSON, L. I., Dec. 25.—(AP)—Dr. John H. Becker, of Ozone Park, Queens, was questioned today by state police in connection with the death of Mrs. Loretta Wilson, 19-year-old New York newlywed, whose nude body was found in a thicket, covered by leaves, late yesterday.

Dr. Becker was detained in technical custody after the woman's husband, William Wilson, told authorities he had examined her on December 17.

The physician, 52 years old, readily admitted to assistant district attorney Joseph Arata and state troopers that he made the examination. He said Wilson and his wife came to the office together and that he told them she was suffering from a kidney ailment.

He said they did not return again.

TARZAN AND THE LION MAN No. 87

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan turned to depart on his hazardous mission of rescuing Rhonda from the gorilla hordes. "I'll go with you!" cried West. "You wouldn't have a chance," said Tarzan. "I'd have as good a chance as you." "Perhaps you would," the apeman replied, "but you would delay me."

Tarzan turned away again and walked to the foot of the precipitous escarpment. There he grasped a trailing liana and climbed to another handhold. Upward, steadily upward, he ascended, but before he reached the top of the cliff, the quick equatorial night had come.

Beyond the summit, Tarzan moved silently, swiftly through the night. He heard familiar noises, and his nostrils caught familiar scents which told him that great lions roamed this strange valley. Presently he saw lights ahead. That must be the city of the gorillas!

When he drew near, he saw a wall skirting the city. It was not high, but sharpened stakes, pointing downward, were set near the top. Thus Tarzan encountered his first obstacle. It was as nothing, however, compared to the traps that lay ahead on his reckless course!

NAVAL EQUALITY BID WITHHELD BY FRANCE

Silence Will Contribute to Better World Atmosphere, Leaders Declare.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Two French cabinet ministers agreed today to postpone public announcement of France's "hands free' naval limitation policy.

Foreign Minister Pierre Laval and Naval Minister Francois Pietri made the postponement a sort of Christmas present to the naval world, hoping that France's temporary silence would contribute to a better international atmosphere.

The attitude they intend eventually to announce is one of opposition to the present system of naval parity under the Washington and London treaties. They claim it has been France's greatest source of irritation in her relations with Italy.

They seek a treaty based upon the actual defensive needs of each country. They also would have a clause by which naval programs would be announced a year in advance.

Pietri, with Corsican tempestuousness, has been in favor of straightforward denunciation of existing treaties to satisfy the French parliament and the people but Laval with his "tread softly" foreign office background vetoed that.

French officials said they were enourmously relieved that Japan has chosen to denounce the Washington treaty, because they were reluctant to do anything to antagonize the United States and Great Britain, yet the parliament has insisted that the treaty must be ended by 1936.

A joint session of the chamber's foreign affairs and naval committees, after hearing both Laval and Pietri, announced today that "steps" would be taken to make France's position known.

The chamber expected this would be done immediately, but Laval thought it best to wait until the United States and Great Britain had a chance to consider the situation.

Here's How Mother Treated My COLD

"When Mother saw I was catching cold, right away she started watching my bowel movements. I was temporarily constipated, so she gave me a TEETHINA powder to cleanse my stomach of poisonous old waste and to correct my acid condition. Boy, I sure feel relieved now, and let me also tell you that when I have colic, diarrhea, gas or indigestion due to improper feeding, sour stomach or excessive acidity, my Mother always gives me TEETHINA. It's easy to take and only costs 30c for 12 powders. I'm strong for TEETHINA and so is my drug store man. Get a package for your little baby."

DAILY SHORT STORY

LOVE IN-LAWS

Leah Told One of Her Bosses to Sit on a Tack, and Had Ample Time to Regret It.

By LUCILE CULLERTON.

It had been one of those days when everything had gone wrong in the office of the Chicago law firm. Head Clerk Leah Flynne, homeward bound on a Clark street trolley, was exhausted almost to hysteria.

Remembering how things had gone haywire, Leah repented the sudden audacity which had prompted her to talk back to a superior—and tell one of her numerous bosses to go sit on a tack.

Leah's seatmate, a handsome chap with tawny hair and a brief, tawny mustache and a length of body apparently too great to be accommodated by the space between the leather seats, withstood the defiant toss of mahogany curls, but when carmined lips began to tremble and tears seemed imminent he became alarmed.

He surveyed Leah anxiously.

Leah did not notice his concern, absorbed as she was in a vigorous ordeal of self-condemnation. Her eyes, apparently focused on the tweed-covered knees which stuck awkwardly out into the aisle, were in reality reviewing the scene in the office. Go sit on a tack! Still the slang phrase was funny. Chuckling, she continued to stare at the long legs beside her.

"'Apologize for that remark.'"

"They aim to amuse," a melodious voice reached her ear.

"Oh, I wasn't—!" panicky.

"Don't fabricate, young lady!"

"I wasn't, really! Besides," meditatively, "they are much longer than Golen's—" Golen was one of the bosses. Just thinking of him—cantankerous old duffer—restored Leah's blazing expression.

"Don't be angry," the melodious voice pleaded. "I'm sorry I spoke."

Leah didn't hear. Once again she was thinking how the exact Miss Esbern had reprimanded her for a certain letter—vicious, of course—but written in accordance with the instructions of the hard-hearted Ellers. It was then she had lost her patience with Miss Esbern.

Leah chuckled. "Go sit on a tack," she repeated softly. Miss Esbern's dismay had been a thing of joy.

"Ardmore avenue!" the conductor shouted. Jumping up, Leah brushed by in front of the long-legged young man, not noticing his uncertain, angry scowl. She alighted and walked to the curb. To her utter amazement, Long-Legs was beside her.

"Apologize for that remark," he ordered, "or I—I'll smack you!"

To what remark did he allude? Nonplused, Leah evaded. "So you live on my street, too?" Her smile was magic.

"Cut it," he growled. "Why should I sit on a tack?"

Red splashes swept over her face as she realized she had been thinking aloud. "I'm sorry," she said wretchedly. "Today has been unusually hectic."

"Doing what?"

"Being bossed," she answered resignedly, "by each individual member of the law firm of Golen, Esbern, Ellers, Hiems & Swold."

The amused quirk of his lips was not discernible in the deepening dusk. "You have my sympathy, Miss—"

"Flynne," she supplied.

Still smiling, he bowed and left.

Before Leah removed her hat at the office the following morning Swold, the lesser boss, was commanding her presence in the conference room. The employers were there, all five of them, with self-satisfied cat-ate-the-canary smiles on their faces.

Ellers, huge and florid-faced, was the spokesman: "The dignity of our office must be upheld at any cost. We have decided that your services will terminate at once."

Hiems, the plump and most congenial boss, offered a check. Her salary up to date, plus two weeks in advance. Composure deserting her, Leah mumbled vague goodbys and fled the room.

Golen followed. Unmindful of the crick in his back, he bent his tall form to whisper in her ear.

"I happen to know," Golen boasted, "that a secretary is needed in Suite 1106, Skyhigh building. Count on me for an A-1 reference."

"Oh, thank you!" She sparkled again. Golen wasn't such a bad old duffer after all. She would follow his tip at once.

1106, Skyhigh building. Grasping the knob of the door eagerly, her fingers suddenly numbed. What was this?

"O'Connell, Smith, Blakewell, Hess & Webber, Attorneys-at-Law," the sign on the frosted door proclaimed.

The irony of fate! Some seconds ticked away while Leah fought a feeling of weakness. A job was a job these days. Gritting her teeth, she entered the reception room.

Five young men were seated around a table in an inner room. Seeing her, they arose as one man and bowed. Leah gasped: the tallest partner was her long-legged street car companion!

"Good morning," the tallest partner greeted her. "We are five green attorneys without a boss. Heaven must have sent you to fill our need."

Leah gulped, smiled at four beaming faces, and twinkled up at the tallest. "My first command—"

He clicked his heels and saluted.

"My first command shall be—smack me!"

As one man the quintuplet rushed forward. Three long strides, and the tallest was gripping her by the shoulders. Bending swiftly, Long-Legs felt a crick in his back. But lips pressed and clinging to a moist mouth was worth it. Even his Uncle Golen would have admitted that.

Leah drew away to give the rest of the firm stern glances.

"Yes, boss," they chorused, "we'll go sit on tacks!" and shuffled out of the room.

CONGRESS ISSUES MOUNT HEAVILY

Nine Busy Days Ahead For Leaders Setting Scene for Session.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—(AP)—Nine busy days are in prospect for those setting the scenes for the convening of the "New Deal" congress a week from Thursday, as problems to be faced by that legislature continue to pile high.

Leaders at the capital, however, will not be able to plot their course finally until completiion by the president of his projected program. Nevertheless, a host of other proposals, which, added together, would call for the spending of around $30,000,000,000, are being brought forward by returning members. The democratic leadership concededly is not certain of holding its big majorities in line either for or against some of these projects.

Social legislation including unemployment insurance and possibly old age pensions, continuation of the NRA, cash payment of the soldiers' bonus, unemployment relief and public works are items already high on the legislative list.

President Roosevelt is expected by congressional leaders to deliver personally his first message to congress, designed to guide the legislators on the administration's program.

Seventy-six new house and 13 new senate democrats, who ran on platforms based on the "New Deal" would be in the president's audience. Some of them campaigned on propositions considered by administration followers as more liberal than the president's program.

Many of the new solons favor legislation calling for a redistribution of wealth through heavier income and inheritance taxes and outlays to relieve the unemployed and aged.

Among the biggest problems confronting the administration are continuation of the NRA, the federal relief organization, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, all of which expire during the next six months unless continued by congress.

In addition, there are nearly 60 appointments, made by the president since congress adjourned, which must be submitted for confirmation by the senate. Also there is the president's proposal for the ratification of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty with Canada.

While the democratic leadership in the senate will remain the same, Mr. Roosevelt will have new chieftains in the house to handle his propositions. Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, is slated to be the next speaker. Representative William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, is a leading candidate for democratic floor leader.

Rotarians will hold no meeting until next Wednesday, officials announced Tuesday. After that meeting the weekly meetings will be held each Monday.

Wade H. Wright, president of the Atlanta Lions Club, sent members of the club a Christmas greeting in which was pointed out the fact that "the symbol of Lion membership gazes in two directions, boldly looking back to observe mistakes, and courageously looking forward, confident and determined." No meeting of the Lions Club will be held this week.

NANCY PAGE

This Gift Never Will Be Ready in Time for Baby's Birthday.

By FLORENCE La GANKE.

John David was celebrating his first birthday on December 27. Nancy was working feverishly to get a hand-made present ready for him. She chose a shoulderette knitted in fine white wool. The trimming which was in pink was found in the washable ribbon that gathered the collar close about his chubby little neck and also in an occasional row of pale pink purling.

Shoulderettes are knitted easily and quickly. They consist, essentially, of one long straight piece of knitting.

To make sleeves the two edges of each end are sewed together.

Since there are no fitted sleeves, no armholes it is easy to slip even a small baby's arms into the affair. There is no binding as the infant sleeps or lies and squirms in his wrap.

As every person who has knitted a sweater or dress knows only too well it is difficult to get garments to fit smoothly when different parts have to be knitted separately and then assembled.

But in this garment the whole thing is done in one long piece which has no shaping other than that of sewing the ends of pieces together to make cuffs.

The length of the shoulderette may be increased if necessary by knitting more rows for the back.

The photograph which is on the leaflet of directions which you may procure by following the directions given below shows the lower part of sleeve and cuff full size. If this cuff will not be large enough for the child increase the number of stitches on the original casting on number.

The yarn which is used should be soft and fine. Of course, the color does not need to be white. One might be worked in sunshiny yellow with the ribbon and purled trimming rows in white.

Detailed instructions for making "Baby's Knitted Shoulderette" may be obtained by sending three cents and a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Nancy Page, care of The Atlanta Constitution.
